
Evaluating
Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari
and
Imam 'Abdullah Tidore's
Ideational Teachings :

*Reinforcing
Indonesia – South Africa's Relations*

Editors :

Muhammed Haron and Ardhya Erlangga Arby

Evaluating
Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari
and
Imam 'Abdullah Tidore's
Ideational Teachings :

Reinforcing Indonesia – South Africa's Relations

Editors
Muhammed Haron
and Ardhya Erlangga Arby

Copyrights © September 2021 by
The Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia and Authors

Publisher :
The Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia
949 Francis Baard Street
Pretoria, South Africa

ISBN :
978-1-991223-71-5 (print)
978-1-991223-72-2 (electronic)

Cover design©
Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia, Pretoria, South Africa, 2021

CONTENTS

Preface	5
The Ambassador of the Republic of Indonesia to the Republic of South Africa, His Excellency Mr. Salman Al Farisi
Remarks	7
The Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Indonesia, Her Excellency Ms. Retno L.P. Marsudi
Foreword	9
The Minister of International Relations and Cooperation of the Republic of South Africa : Her Excellency Dr. Naledi Pandor
Concepts and Terms	11
Abbreviations	17
Authors/Contributors	18
Acknowledgment	19
Introductory Chapter:
Shaykh Yusuf and Imam’s Abdullah: Cabo de Goede Hoop’s Melayu Archipelago Personalities Textually Immortalized	21
Muhammed Haron and Ardhya Erlangga Arby
PART I: SHAYKH YUSUF AL-MAKASSARI
Poem: Karamats – Beacon of Lights	39
Luqman Rakiep
Shaykh Yusuf Through Pictures (I)	43
Chapter One: Shaykh Muhammad Yusuf Al-Makassari (1037-1111/1627-99): Scholarly and Religio-Political Networks	47
Azyumardi Azra
Chapter Two: Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari : A Bibliographic Review	77
Baharuddin Abd Rahman
Chapter Three: Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari’s Thinking: A Philosophical Construction	97
Mustari Mustafa
Chapter Four: Tawhid’s Impeccable Lustre: Essential Teachings of Shaykh Yusuf	112
Muzdalifah Sahib

Chapter Five: Shaykh Yusuf's Al-Nafha Al-Şaylānīyyah fi l-MinḥaAl-Raḥmānīyya: A Fountain of Spiritual Values	130
Yousuf Dadoo
Chapter Six: Shaykh Yusuf's Treatises: Themes in Select Sufi Texts	147
Suleman Dangor
Shaykh Yusuf Through Pictures (II)	167
PART II : IMAM ‘ABDULLAH IBN QADI ‘ABDUS-SALAM
Poem: Immortal Soul	173
Luqman Rakiep
Chapter 7: From Dar al-Islam to a Place of Sadness: Understanding the struggles of Tuan Guru of Tidore at the Cape of Good Hope 1780-1807	176
Shafiq Morton
Chapter 8: Tuan Guru's Educational influence on the colonial Cape Muslims (circa 18th and 19th centuries): A Synopsis	188
Ebrahim Salie
Chapter 9: Tuan Guru: His Relevance in the 21st Century	207
Luqman Rakiep and Muttaqin Rakiep
Chapter 10: Da'wah During the Dutch and British Colonial Period	231
Ebrahim Rhoda
Tuan Guru : A Complementary Portraits	255
Closing Message	257
H.E. Ambassador Prof. Anil Sooklal
Deputy Director-General for Asia and the Middle East
Department of International Relations and Cooperation (DIRCO)
Afterword: Opportunities for Further Research	259
Muhammed Haron and Ardhya Erlangga Arby
Biographies	262

Preface

by His Excellency Mr. Salman Al Farisi, Ambassador of the Republic of Indonesia to the Republic of South Africa

History has proven many times, that people all over the world are connected. The existence of two prominent figures from Indonesia namely, Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari and Tuan Guru, has undoubtedly influenced the dynamics of Islam in South Africa.

However, what if, the impact of those two figures goes way beyond the religious practice dimension?. What if the successful relation that Indonesia and South Africa have today, is also contributed by the product of the teachings by Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari and Tuan Guru?. Those kinds of thinking come across to my mind as I carry my Ambassadorial post in Pretoria.

During my tenure, I came across with many brilliant minds from Indonesia and South Africa, who dared to answer and meticulously elaborate those questions. We had a discussion and exchanged our views on many interesting topics, such as the essential teaching of Tawhid in South African community to the relevance of those prominent figures in this modern century.

This book is a compilation of intriguing perspectives from the contributors who tries to put a helicopter view on the impacts of Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari and Tuan Guru had towards many aspects in the South African communities, including the political network that helps to nurture the successful relationship between the two countries.

I hope this edited text could provide a broad analysis to the readers of how Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari's and Tuan Guru's teaching were developed and disseminated during and after they were stationed at the Cape as well as serves a basis for evaluating the impacts on relation between Indonesia and South Africa.

Salman Al-Farisi

Remarks

by Her Excellency, Ms. Retno L.P. Marsudi, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Indonesia

Indonesia and South Africa share a close bond with strong historical roots. Although our diplomatic relations were officially established in 1994, our ties goes back more than 3 centuries during colonial rule. During these times, early interactions between our two communities were influenced by prominent individuals from Indonesia such as Syaikh Yusuf al-Makassari or Syaikh Yusuf (1699) and Prince Abdullah bin Qadi Abdus-Salaam (1807).

Upon their arrival in Cape Cabo de Goede Hoop and Robben Island in the 16th and 17th century, these figures played an important role in the early spread of Islam in South Africa through their teachings, establishment of madrasahs, and masjids. Furthermore, their courageous struggle against the colonialists were also a source of inspiration for the local communities.

Their traits serves as an essential foundation for the strong socio-historical, cultural and religious bonds between our Peoples, even until the present day. The Cape Malay community in South Africa provides proof of that, becoming home for many South Africans with Indonesian ancestry.

To respect their struggle and legacy, our two countries have honoured Syaikh Yusuf. The South African government awarded him the Order of the Companions of O.R. Tambo in 2005 and issued a special collection of postage stamps in 2011. Meanwhile the Indonesian Government declared Syaikh Yusuf as Indonesia's National Hero in 2008.

Bilateral relations between Indonesia and South Africa have flourished as we have many common goals. In 1955, our shared aspirations to denounce colonialism was demonstrated through support of the Dasasila Bandung in the Asia Africa Conference. Today, under the Strategic Partnership, Indonesia and South Africa continues to be highly committed to strengthen bilateral relations in many aspects of cooperation.

Both countries have also actively advanced common goals in various international forums including the Indian Ocean Rim Association (IORA) and in the Non-Permanent Membership of the UN Security Council. Regionally, South Africa was the first Southern African Development Community (SADC) member to sign the ASEAN Treaty of Amity and Cooperation (TAC) in 2020, charting the pathway for closer ASEAN and SADC relations.

Lastly, I thank the Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia in Pretoria for initiating this book project. Series of writings in this book serves as a good reference that provides deeper insights on various values and teachings of these two respected personalities as well as in better understanding roots of historical ties between Indonesia and South Africa.

Jakarta, September 2021

A handwritten signature in blue ink, consisting of a large initial 'R' followed by several loops and a final flourish.

Retno L.P. Marsudi

Foreword

by Her Excellency Dr Naledi Pandor Minister of International Relations and Cooperation of the Republic of South Africa

South Africa and Indonesia established diplomatic relations in August 1994. The historical ties and linkages between the two countries go back more than three and a half centuries. During the 16th and 17th centuries hundreds of slaves and dissidents from Indonesia were sent to the Cape of Good Hope. Colonization and anti-Islamic persecution led to the exile of adversaries. Many of them were political exiles, comprising of aristocrats, emirs, advisors, and imams who were banished from the Malay-Indonesian archipelago at the hands of the Dutch who were trying to establish hegemony in the region.

“Evaluating Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari and Imam ‘Abdullah Tidore’s Ideational Teachings : Reinforcing Indonesia - South Africa’s Relations,” has been written in the context of the history of colonization of Africa and Asia and the people of Indonesia who were expelled to the Cape of Good Hope. The essence of the book has encapsulated how the foundation of Islam in South Africa was paved by Abadin Tadia Tjoessoep (1629 -1699), more commonly known as Shaykh Yusuf of Macassar (Al-Makassari) also referred to as the ‘Father of Islam’ and Imam Abdullah Kadi Abdu Salaam (1712-1807), widely known as Tuan Guru (Master Teacher). Both men were of royal lineage. Tuan Guru was a descendent from the royal house of Tidore who was banished to the Cape in 1780 and incarcerated twice on Robben Island from 1780-81 and 1785-89.

Many Muslim individuals across South Africa have followed in the footsteps of Shaykh Yusuf and Imam Abdullah. These include Imam Abdullah Haron, Ahmed Timol, Babla Saloojee and Abu Bakr Asvat who were imprisoned and died in the name of Freedom, Equality and Justice in South Africa.

The inspiring narrative of the Shaykh - scholar, mystic, freedom fighter and humanitarian - set the precedent for future generations of South African struggle heroes, who the late revered President Nelson Mandela described as "one of the best sons of Africa," and inspired him to fight against the apartheid regime. Shaykh Yusuf was posthumously awarded the Order of the Companions of O.R. Tambo in Gold on 27 September 2005 for his contribution to the struggle against colonialism.

This book provides a deeper understanding of the culture and history of the peoples who are descended from those subjugated to slavery and the centuries-old sources of prejudice. It provides the reader with an extensive insight into the rich cultural manifestations which have impacted and influenced the social, cultural, and economic life of generations of South Africans.

The authors, with their analysis and recollections, have expertly explored the respective teachings of Shaykh Yusuf and Imam Abdullah who shaped relations between our two countries. It would be remiss of me not to mention the significant role Indonesia played in supporting South Africa's freedom struggle.

South Africa and Indonesia will continue to be steadfast partners and we will strive to further strengthen our relations.

Concepts and Terms:

A Selection

1. Terms, Phrases, and Concepts: Towards a Collection

For this publication, the editors chose to select phrases, terms, and concepts from the chapters since these appear in most – if not all – of them. They have been identified and listed here for two reasons.

The first is that Arabic cum Bahasa Melayu terms and concepts have been employed in the different essays throughout the publication. As far as one can conclude, the authors, like others, seem to agree that the exact meanings of these terms/concepts could not be fully captured in the English language; and for this reason, each of them have been inserted the meaning alongside the Arabic/Bahasa Melayu term/concept in their respective essays.

The second reason is that since some of these terms/concepts have been absorbed into local socio-linguistic cultures at the Cape and Makassar respectively, they have become part of their everyday usage. Anyone who meets members from these communities that speak, among others, English, Afrikaans, and Bahasa Indonesia will note how these terms have been employed in both conversational contexts and written works.

Be that as it may, since these religio-cultural terms/concepts have been absorbed in these languages and included in the essays, they were retained with their meanings having been inserted in brackets; in some instances, the reverse appears. Besides having listed these selected phrases, terms, and concepts below, it is perhaps necessary to comment on the issue of ‘transliteration.’

2. Spelling Convention: A Note

A quick note regarding the spelling convention followed in this publication will be helpful. Firstly, since words transliterated from Arabic and Bahasa Indonesia differed it was decided to retain both where necessary. Secondly, because of decision, it opted to retain the names of persons and places as they appeared in the published and archival texts. Thirdly, it will thus be observed that in one instance the word would be spelt as ‘makrifat’ (Bahasa Indonesia) and in the other ma’rifat (Arabic) or Syekh (Bahasa Indonesia) as opposed to Shaykh (Arabic) illustrating the different spelling conventions that were adopted.

And fourthly, though there are well-known convention systems that have been created, this publication was flexible in their application. It did, however, show a preference towards the International Journal of Middle East Studies (IJMES) system; one that is generally applied to Arabic and that consists of numerous diacritical marks that eased the task of the publishers when it came to the question of transliteration¹.

3. Their Transliteration: Scholarly Challenges

Over many generations multi-lingual communities have borrowed and exchanged words and phrases found in the languages that they used and spoke. One notes – from the list below - that the transliterated words appear in the first column and their meanings appear in the second column. As observed throughout this publication, the authors who made use of transliterated terms, phrases, and concepts tried to make use of known transliteration conventions in both Arabic and Bahasa Melayu; many of which are found on online sites. While some, who are familiar with the available online software programmes, managed to complete this transliteration process in accordance with the set conventions, others presented the transliterated words without considering these conventions as is the case in this publication.

It should, however, be stated that the transliteration process differs from one language to the other as indicated in the previous section. It was shown that the authors' use of the transliteration system differed. Perhaps it is useful to give extra examples to further illustrate the point; the first sample was taken from Dr. M. Sahib's chapter when she referred to the Shaykh's long-winded name: Abū al-Maḥāsīn al-Shaykh al-Ḥājj Yūsuf al-Shāfi'ī al-Ash'arī, Hadiyyat Allāh Tāj al-Khalwatī al-Jāwī al-Makassarī bin Walī' Allāh Abī al-Jalāl 'Abd Allāh Khidr bin Abī al-Khayr Yaḥyā bin 'Alawī al-Haḍramī.

While there is no interest to unpack, as given here, the complete name, the focus is on two words in the long title. The first sample looks at the word 'Shaykh' (that has been transliterated from 'Arabic' and that has since become an accepted word in English); it reflected different variations in Bahasa Indonesia: some rendered it as 'Syekh'; others presented it as 'Syeikh,' and others spelt it as 'Syaikh'. The second sample refers to the Shaykh's geographical appellation, namely, al-Maqassari and al-Makassari. Though both have been adopted depending upon one's personal choice, the latter and not the first of the two is the correct rendition. This is so, since the letter 'k' corresponds with the letter in Arabic and it is vastly different from the letter 'q' that is represented by a different Arabic letter. And for this reason, al-Makassari was used in this publication.

Considering the linguistic variations, it may be stated that the Indonesian scholars – along with their European/American/Australian counterparts who specialized in Indonesia's cultures communities and dialects - remained faithful to the transliteration system that they adopted and implemented. They, of course, invariably differed from those who came from Southern Africa; a geographical region where English remains the dominant language and where its scholars leaned towards the acceptance of Arabic instead of the Bahasa Indonesia transliteration system.

Since Arabic and Bahasa Indonesia varied in their use of the transliteration formats, it was decided to stick to the Arabic transliteration system that has been and continues to be dominant. The one system was promoted by the Dutch publisher E.J. Brill², and the other was advocated by the International Association for Middle Eastern Studies of North America (IAMESNA) as already mentioned. Even though the former devised an acceptable one, IJMES produced a system³ that was more flexible linguistically and, for this reason, it was adopted for this publication.

Though the Lexilogos online site⁴ generally adopted the IJMES system, it also accommodated letters that were part of the Brill transliteration convention; this was partly used when the selected catalogue of words below was generated. In the list below, it was decided to create two lists; the one that only included phrases and terms; and the other that restricted itself to catalogue concepts.

4. Phrases/Terms

Akhaṣṣ al-Khawāṣṣ	Super Elect
Al-Akhlāq ul-Karīmah	Noble Morals
Al-Insān al-Kāmil	The Perfect Being/Universal Human Being
Al-Mawjūd al-Majāzi	Allegorical Being
Al-Mawjūd al-Ḥaqīqi	Real/True Being
Al-Qadā wa al-Qadar	The Divine Decree
Al-Ustādh al-Akbar	The Great Teacher
Āyāt al-Sab'i al-Munjīyāt	The Seven Saving Verses
Balad al-Gharīb	Land of Strangeness
Balad al-Ḥuzn	Land of Sorrow
Balad al-Kuffār	Land of Disbelievers/Heretics
Dār al-La'nah	Abode of Accursedness
Dewata Seuwwae	Oneness of God
‘Ilm al-Akhlāq	Science of Ethics
‘Ilm al-Fiqh	Islamic Jurisprudence
‘Ilm Kalām	Islamic Theology
‘Ilm Ṭawḥīd	Oneness of Allah
Ḥusn al-Ẓann	Harbouring Positive Thoughts about God
Makān al-Ḥuzn	Place of sorrow
Qādī Malik al-‘Adl	Judge who rules with justness/royal mufti
Tāj al-Khalwatī	Crown of the Khalwati Order
Ṭawḥīd al-Ikhlāṣ	Sincere Tawḥīd
Tazkiyat al-Nafs	Purification of the Rūḥ
Tuanta Salamaka ri Gowa	Leader who brings happiness to Gowa Kingdom
Waḥdat al-Ṣamad	Unity of the One who fulfils all creatures needs
Waḥdat al-Shuhūd	Unity of Consciousness/phenomenological monism
Waḥdat al-Wujūd	Unity of Being/ontological monism

5. Concepts

‘Ālim	pl. ‘Ulamā	Learned Scholar(s)
Allāh		God
Al-Ākhir		The Last
Al-Awwal		The First
Al-Bāṭin		Interior
Al-Hādī		One who gives guidance
Al-Ḥulūl		Divine Incarnation
Al-Ihāthah		Encompassing
Al-Ma’iyyah		Omnipresence
Al-Muḍill		One who allows humans to go astray
Al-Zāhir		The External
‘Ārifīn		Gnostics
‘Azīmats		Talismanic Cures
Bāṭin		Esoteric/Inner spiritual dimension
Baqā’		Subsistence
Dakwah/Da’wah		Proselytizing
Dhikr		Divine Remembrance
Du’ā’/Du’āh		Supplication/Prayer
Fāsiq		Sinner
Fiqh		Jurisprudence
Ḥadīth	pl. Ahadīth	Prophetic Statement(s)
Ḥājī/Hadjee	pl. Hājjīs	Pilgrim/Pilgrims
Ḥakekat/Ḥaqīqah		Essence/Truth
Ḥalqahs		Circles
‘Ibadah		Worship
Jāhil		Ignoramus
Kalām		Theology
Khalīpha/Khalīfah		Vice-Regent
Khawāṣṣ		Elite
Kalām		Theology
Karāmāt		Miraculous Powers
Madrasah		School
Makrifat/Ma’rifah		Gnosis

Mashā'ikh		Spiritual Masters
Mu'allaf		Convert to Islam
Muftī		Jurist who issues legal verdicts
Muḥaddith		Hadith Compiler
Mujāhid		Warrior
Murīd		Disciple
Pesantren		Boarding school
Qirā'ah		Reading method
Riwāyāt		Prophetic Encomium
Rūḥ		Spirit
Sālik		Seeker
Sharī'ah		Islamic Law
Shuyūkh		Elderly Gentlemen/Teachers
Silsilah		Chain
Sūfī	pl. Sūfīs	Mystic(s)
Sulūk		Comportment
Tablīgh		Preach
Tafsīr		Commentary
Tajallī		Divine Illumination
Tajwīd		Recitation (with correct pronunciation)
Taqdīr		God's pre-ordainments
Tanazzul		Descent
Taraqqī		Ascent
Ṭarekat/Ṭarīqah		Path (of truth)
Ṭarīqah		Order (Sufi)
Ṭaşawwuf		Sufism/Mysticism
Waḥdāniyyah		God's Unicity/Absolute Oneness
Walī		Saintly Figure
Wilāyah		Eminent Sainthood
Wird	pl. Awrād	Litany/Litanies
Zāhir		Exoteric/Outer Spiritual Dimension
Ziyārath		Visit

ENDNOTES

¹ <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Transliteration>. See Said M. Shiyab. 2021. Research into Translation and Training in Arab Academic Institutions. London: Routledge; and consult Edward Y. Odisho. 1992. 'Transliterating English in Arabic.' In Zeitschrift für Arabische Linguistik. 24: 21-34, and G. M. Wickens. 1953. 'The Transliteration of Arabic: An Approach in the Light of Current Problems of Printing and Publication.' In Journal of Near Eastern Studies. 12(4): 253-256. Also consider Andrea Acri and Arlo Griffiths. 2014. 'The Romanization of Indic Script used in Ancient Indonesia. In BKI. 170(2-3): 365-378.

² <https://referenceworks.brillonline.com/pages/help/transliteration-islam>

³ <https://www.cambridge.org/core/journals/international-journal-of-middle-east-studies/information/author-resources/ijmes-translation-and-transliteration-guide#:~:text=Transliteration%20IJMES%20is%20considered%20a%20leader%20in%20the,Correct%20transliterations%20are%20the%20responsibility%20of%20the%20author.>

⁴https://www.lexilogos.com/keyboard/arabic_latin.htm.

Abbreviations

1. Names, Titles, and Terms

BKI	Bijdragen tot de Taal-, Land- en Volkenkunde
CDA	Critical Discourse Analysis
DEIC	Dutch East India Company
DRC	Dutch Reformed Church
GAL	Geschichte der Arabischen Litteratur
IAMESNA	International Association for Middle Eastern Studies of North America
KITLV	The Royal Netherlands Institute of Southeast Asian and Caribbean Studies
LMS	London Missionary Society
SAMS	South African Missionary Society
UIN	Universitas Islam Negeri Syarif Hidayatullah Jakarta
UKM	University Kebangsaan Malaysia
UNISA	University of South Africa
UWC	University of the Western Cape
VOC	Vereenigde Oost Indische Compagnie
WCARS	Western Cape Archives Records Service
WMMS	Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Records
YPGPI	Penerbit Yayasan Pembina Generasi Penerus Indonesia

2. Other

Comp	Compiler
Ed.	pl. Eds. Editor(s)
Ed.	Edition (regards book publications)
Ms.	Manuscript
N.D.	No Date
Tr.	Translator
Trans.	Translation
Vols.	Volumes

Authors/Contributors

A

Anil Sooklal
Ardhya Erlangga Arby
Azyumardi Azra

B

Baharuddin Abd Rahman

D

David John Rawson

E

Ebrahim Rhoda
Ebrahim Salie

L

Luqman Rakiep

M

Muhammed Haron
Mustari Mustafa
Muttaqim Rakiep
Muzdalifah Sahib

N

Naledi Pandor

R

Retno L.P. Marsudi

S

Salman Al Farisi
Shafiq Morton
Suleman Dangor

Y

Yousuf Dadoo

Acknowledgment

First and foremost, praises and thanks to Allah Subhanahu Wa Ta'ala, the Most Gracious and the Most Merciful, for His showers of blessings throughout this book project so that it can be completed in time.

On this note, may we – the Editors - take this opportunity, on behalf of the Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia in Pretoria, to acknowledge the help of all the people involved in this project, without their support this book would not have become a reality.

We would like to start by acknowledging those who contributed to this edited text. While we recognize the generous Remarks that were made by Indonesia's Minister of Foreign Affairs, Her Excellency Ms. Retno L.P. Marsudi and the kind Foreword that was prepared by South Africa's Minister of International Relations and Cooperation, Her Excellency Dr. Naledi Pandor, we also express gratitude to Professor Anil Sooklal, DIRCO's Deputy Director General for the Asia and the Middle East, for his Closing Message.

We also thank the Ambassador of the Republic of Indonesia, His Excellency Mr. Salman Al Farisi for opening this book with the Preface underscoring the importance of this publication. Their generous words and kind support for this publication, says much about the connection that exists between our two nation-states. Though the book's concentration is on two traditional personalities, it also underscores the nature of the relationship that exists since colonial times between the peoples of these two nations from the South.

We would also like to, however, express my appreciation to each one of the Chapters' Authors whose names appear in this book; they have contributed their knowledge and time in providing invaluable insights into the life and times and the teachings of Shaykh Yusuf and Tuan Guru. Both are prominent respectful figures who have become the center of attention of this book.

We, moreover, wish to thank Mr. Armien Cassiem (from Cape Town) for his technical assistance given to the Editors. And, we are also grateful to Mr. David John Rawson, MPS, for having translated two chapters that were originally written in Bahasa Indonesia.

Our appreciation also goes to the Indonesian Consulat General in Cape Town, Western Cape, for facilitating the first initial meeting between the Editors and the prospectives authors at the Consulate in December 2020.

Last, but not the least, and in particular, the Embassy would also like to convey its sincere gratitude and appreciation to Prof. Muhammed Haron as the Co-Editor of this book, for his endless support and untiring assistance from the start of this book project until finish.

Finally, we hope this simple but essential publication may be able to serve as a source of knowledge that may enrich the readers understanding and perspectives about Islamic values that were taught and disseminated by Shaykh Yusuf and Tuan Guru.

The Editors

Introduction

Shaykh Yusuf and Imam ‘Abdullah: Cabo de Goede Hoop’s Melayu Archipelago Personalities – Textually Immortalized

Muhammad Haron and Ardhya Erlangga Arby

1. Introduction

Throughout this post-colonial and post-modern period during which nation-states were born, many scholars have written about the social histories and politics related to the plethora of colonized communities. While some analyzed these communities’ stance towards the colonizers, others assessed the contributions of key inspirational individuals; ones that courageously resisted the colonizers.

The governments of nations paid tribute to these valiant and brave persons; because of their courageousness and gallantry, they were given official recognition as national heroes for their significant contributions. Their audacious efforts and their exceptional skills in standing up against the colonial forces placed them in the forefront; they belonged to those that helped to shape and direct the development of their colonized communities.

Because of their genuine anti-colonial labors in influencing and defining these communities’ identities, they not only motivated them to transform and change, but they also stimulated those in the subsequent generations to emulate and imitate them. They did so whilst being part of predominantly traditional societies that encountered various forms of secularization during the colonial period.

Nevertheless, since these iconic figures’ deaths their memories continued to live on; these were through the published memoirs and other collections. Some of these biographical accounts were either based on the customary oral traditions or through the evolving written traditions. Selections of these personal chronicles and recollections were, however, also partially tied to their writings of religious manuscripts¹; ones that they penned under trying colonial circumstances in and outside their places of birth.

Before going further to elaborate – albeit briefly - on these issues, the purpose of this introductory chapter is to insert on a broad historical and literary canvas the selected publications that sketched the biographies of two iconic Melayu Archipelago (cum Cabo de Goede Hoop) personalities. The two individuals that this book focused on in this publication are Shaykh Yusuf al Makassar (d.1699) and Imam ‘Abdullah ibn Qadi ‘Abdus Salam (aka Tuan Guru d.1807); the latter came from Indonesia’s Island of Tidore, and the former hailed from Makassar.

Both were and still are respected religious leaders who countered the Dutch East India Company (DEIC)/Vereenigde Oost-Indiesche Companje VOC’s² (hereafter: VOC est.1602) hegemonic authorities during different historical periods; and both left indelible legacies from which subsequent and current communities continue to benefit. Fatefully, the two have been regarded as iconic figures that made inputs to the formation of the nascent Cape Muslim community as well as to those communities from which they came in the Melayu Archipelago (Kepulauan Melayu).³

2. The Shaykh and the Imam

2.1 Brief Comparative Perspective

Communities in Indonesia's Makassar and the Island of Tidore witnessed the emergence and the impact of these noble princely personalities; they watched how they lived selfless lives even though they were from the nobility (that is, the Orang Cayen). Both Shaykh Yusuf and Imam 'Abdullah reflected admirable skills when they interacted and dealt with the colonizing authorities that took charge of their communal affairs.

They did not hesitate to voice their views against their communities' suppressive rulers; the mere fact that they were exiled was indicative of their valiant actions. It may be argued that during these circumstances, they were the ones that openly spoke 'truth to power' overlooking the extent to which they might suffer; they had the greater objective in mind: that is, social justice for all.

Since both were exiled to Cabo de Goede where they lived, they continued to live their lives as simple respectful beings. They inspired several in and beyond their communities; and, because of this, they have been identified as part of the 'circle of Karamat' that protect Cabo de Goede Hoop⁴. Their followers, who admired them, publicly showed to what extent they wanted to be like them; they expressed their desire to live their lives imitating them; they related to their fellow human beings the reasons for wanting to follow their admirable and laudable footsteps.

And since both displayed exemplary character traits, many wanted to be associated with them; and they did so by participating in the turuq (that is, Sufi orders such as the Naqshbandiyyah) to which they belonged. Because of the way these personalities carried themselves, they were respected and revered during their lifetime; and after their death, communal reverence towards them continued. Their burial grounds became part of the network of Karamat; sacred places that were visited and that are still visited by all and sundry for various reasons.

As a result of their legacies through different forms of contributions, the Indonesian and South African Muslim communities drew their inspiration from them; their respective legacies helped to stimulate and change the social histories of the communities in both countries. And the various studies, which have appeared over several years, have offered the communities a fair understanding and insight into their respective contributions. At this point, the focus shifts to selected texts that carefully examined the Shaykh and the Imam's lives and their writings.

2.2 Immortalized in Texts⁵

As already indicated, numerous works – books, book chapters, journal articles, and popular newspaper essays as well as writings of online bloggers – surfaced over the years; each text provided the writers’ readings and interpretations of these two iconic scholars’ writings. Compared to Imam ‘Abdullah, most of the studies reflected on Shaykh Yusuf’s Sufi work. Considering this fact, the introductory essay intends to select a few works that zoomed in on Shaykh Yusuf and that have had a considerable influence on everyone who wrote or researched the works from an academic perspective.

It is an established fact that Shaykh Yusuf, who was a renowned Sufi Shaykh, was, at the same time, a notable author. He authored a series of manuscripts that were classified as Sufi manuscripts. It differed from Imam ‘Abdullah’s Compendium that did not include much on Sufism; its focus was more on theology and law. If one compares the Shaykh and the Imam, it becomes crystal clear that the Shaykh fascinating life highlighted the fact that he struck an important balance between Sufi practices and ‘jihadism’ when he was coerced in taking up arms against the VOC. During the time when the Shaykh served the Bantinese royalty, he scripted a few invaluable Sufi manuscripts; these subsequently influenced many others and they used them in tandem with Islam’s primary sources.

The Shaykh, unlike Imam ‘Abdullah who came from the Tidorese royalty and a legally trained family, demonstrated his unique qualities as a Sufi scholar; he reflected this while he was serving the Bantinese royalty and even when he was confined to the Ceylon and Cape environs as a VOC prisoner. Now when one assesses the Imam, it was observed that he had the knack of carefully scribbling down from memory a mushaf as well as numerous other religious texts; all of these were compiled into his famous Compendium. And in addition to these very important religio-educational interventions, the Imam opened the first formal (home-based) madrasa and the first masjid at the Cape.

Now when one compares these two figures, one may argue that their activities were similar yet distinctly different; this implied that they complemented one another in various ways. While the Shaykh set the pace and laid the required spiritual cum intellectual foundations, the Imam built on these by not only continuing with the manuscript tradition but by setting up tangible structures within which religio-spiritual teachings were disseminated to the young and wherein he entrenched the unification of a nascent Muslim community. The Shaykh and the Imam used their writings and the sacred institutions to reinforce the community’s identity as Muslims under very challenging circumstances. It should not be forgotten that both functioned during a period when the VOC prohibited Islam effectively restricting Muslims from practicing their religious tradition.

(a) Texts on the Shaykh

Leaving that aside and turning to texts that covered the Shaykh’s life and his works, the available bibliographical survey shows the scholarly interest seems to have taken off from the mid-20th century even though a few undertook insignificant studies. If one peruses the earlier part of the 20th century, it was noted that only one essay appeared before the 1950s and this was the text completed by the Dutch scholar, Drewes.⁶ Thereafter, Dutch and South African scholars such as Cense, van Selms, du Plessies, and Greyling⁷ offered concise understandings and overviews.

Now the same argument holds when scrutinizing the works written by Indonesian and Malaysian scholars. Only short essays, for example, appeared over the many decades; one of those who contributed to these was (Buya) Hamka.⁸ Apart from Hamka's few scholarly interventions, there was several popular articles that appeared; these were printed in the daily newspapers and weekly/monthly magazines prior to and after his informative series.

Based on the survey that was undertaken and still a work-in-progress, Haron's assessment of Indonesian scholarship revealed that Nabilah Lubis, Abu Hamid, and Azyumardi Azra⁹ have qualitatively expanded on understanding the Shaykh's life and works in different ways. But while that is acknowledged, it should be noted that a few shorter studies appeared between 1982 and 1990. Two texts deserve to be mentioned: the first is the research of Sultan Sahib; the latter completed his during 1982;¹⁰ and the second is the skripsi of Abu Bakar Paka during 1990.¹¹

While nothing was heard of or from Paka since he completed his thesis, Sahib produced many more subsequently. Even though it was difficult to obtain copies of the two mentioned researchers' skripsis, it is difficult to say whether they relied on, among others, the work of Dangor 1981/1982;¹² perhaps Sahib did not since he was occupied with his research whilst Dangor had just completed his. In between these outputs, Von Kleist completed his MA thesis at a German university during 1986¹³ and he also drew from Dangor's study.

Alongside these academic studies, one should list the publications of Massiara, Tudjimah, Sibali, and Ramli¹⁴ as well as that of Ince Nurdin Daeng Magassing.¹⁵ The last-mentioned publication, according to some Indonesian researchers, appeared under a slightly edited title Riwayat Syekh Yusuf dan Kisah I Makkutaknang dengang Mannuntungi. Perhaps it instructive to briefly summarize the contents of this particular early 20th century work.

The first part of the text contains the mythical story that mentioned Sayyid Khidr as Shaykh Yusuf's father; it further narrated that it remains a sacred story among many and particularly so the adherents of the Sufi orders. The author then described and informed, among others, how the relationship between the King of Gowa and Daeng Leyo unfolded. The second portion argued that the father was a Banten Sufi, namely Abdullah Khayri al-Munajalawy. This was reflected along the margins of one of the Shaykh's works titled Kitab Al-Ambah Ar-Rab la Ilaaha Illallah. The publication also appeared under a slightly edited title: Riwayat Syekh Yusuf dan Kisah I Makkutaknang dengan Mannuntungi. This work was transliterated and translated by Djirong Basang (Daeng Ngewa) into Bahasa Indonesia (Jakarta: Departemen Pendidikan dan Kebudayaan, 1985). On another site, it added the following indicated that it was inserted in the mentioned title: ‘And, (it is a) story I Makkutaknang with [Daeng] Mannuntungi [as told by Latuppu Daeng Mappuli]’.

Setting the mythical dimensions that had been narrated and captured in this text during that time, later scholars referred to earlier reflected on other aspects; they analyzed some of his manuscripts and made attempts to write an informative social history that assist us to fully appreciate the Shaykh’s captivating life as a Sufi Shaykh.

(b) Texts on the Imam

When one compares the texts that have been written on the Shaykh to those that gave attention to the Imam, then it is obvious that much more attention was given to the Shaykh over the years. Since that was the case, all those that engaged with the Imam’s life and works will be listed with brief comments.

A brief scan of bibliographical compilations indicated that studies on the Imam started out in the late 1980s; prior to this, one was unable to find any significant academic or popular study. Nevertheless, this may be attributed to the fact that during the 1980s the Cape Muslims were seeking for earlier models to motivate them in their uprising against the apartheid state. Gerrie Lubbe¹⁶, who was a UNISA professor and who studied the developments among Cape Muslims, wrote an interesting essay. Herein he outlined the biography of Abdullah Qadi Abdus-Salam by covering three aspects of his life: (a) the Imam’s contribution to ‘religious literature’; (b) his involvement with and guidance to the Muslims; and (c) his role in Muslim education. Lubbe also recorded a few legends surrounding the Imam’s life which were orally transmitted. Not long after Lubbe’s essay, Achmat David’s produced a very brief study of the Imam’s manuscripts.

After this short piece by Davids¹⁷, he decided to analyze the educational philosophy of the Imam since he established a madrasah in the late 18th century. He stressed that this madrasah played an important role as an institution of assimilation and transmission of religious and cultural ideas during that period. Up until Davids republished this essay in an edited publication with Yusuf da Costa during the mid-1990s, nothing else was written in South Africa and in Indonesia. It should, however, be stated that offspring of the Imam managed to reconnect with family members in Tidore and this stimulated an interest in exploring the life of the Imam.

Despite an important historical visit by Nur-el-Erefaan Rakiép¹⁸ - a fourth descendant - during 1993, the scholarly circles in South Africa and Indonesia did not bother to assess this visit; and nor did they examine the Imam’s Compendium as expected. Be that as it may, Nur-el-Erefaan Rakiép, presented a conference paper in which he reconstructed the Imam’s life and times. For this paper, he used primary sources that included oral tradition and folklore narratives as well as secondary material to beef up his portrayal of the Imam. Since then, no other essay appeared; and it was only during the mid-2000s that serious attention was given to the Imam by a South African and an Indonesian scholar; the one working independently from the other.

Both Bunyamin Marasabessy¹⁹ and Auwais Rafudeen²⁰ shifted their attention to the Imam; and this resulted in different publications on the Shaykh's ideas. Marasabessy referred to the Imam to explore the 'Cape Muslim Philosophy Education System;' herein he reflected on the Imam's reinforcement of the 'Ashari theological view and he, as expected, referred to the Compendium. Like Marasabessy, Rafudeen not only evaluated the Imam's life, but he also took a closer look at the Imam's; the result of Rafudeen's research caused him to produce two complementary articles; essays that examined and expounded upon Tuan Guru's thoughts. These supplemented Rafudeen's translation of part of the Imam's extant manuscript. Marasabessy, however, made a further study along with a colleague exploring the Imam's resistance against the VOC and his exile to Cabo de Goede Hoop. Marasabessy and Farouk for the first time produced a book length text on the Imam.

Sometime after these publications, Shafiq Morton, who is an award-winning journalist and a respected radio broadcaster with the Cape Town-based Voice of the Cape, was tasked to zoom in on this charismatic persona. Morton's biography,²¹ which already went through a second edition and along with the Marasabessy & Farouk text,²² filled a critical gap historically and biographically. Since Morton's book was reviewed by a few scholars, it briefly draws from Willemse's review underlining its importance. T

Willemse stated that, 'Morton tells, for those readers interested in the underclass history of the Cape, an engrossing tale of Tuan Guru's history in Tidore, the world of his upbringing, his banishment, his supposed spiritual powers and his leadership. He spends a full chapter, Chapter 10, on the meaning of Ma'rifat al-Islam wa'l-Imān and traces the considerable impact of Tuan Guru and his descendants on life in the Cape Muslim community and the broader South African society.'²³ By and large, Morton's book²⁴ is a necessary read for anyone wishing to study and investigate Imam 'Abdullah's contributions.

Besides having identified a few who published their findings, mention should be made of two scholars who have discussed Imam Abdullah in public presentations. Prof. Michael Laffan²⁵, who is based at Princeton University, has been undertaking research on this Imam and he has shared his thoughts at various seminars. Ebrahim Salie²⁶, who has a chapter in this book, is another archivist and avid Cape Muslim researcher that has devoted parts of his extensive research to the Imam; a portion of that appears in the chapter included in this edited work.

3. This Publications: Contents Summarized

So far, this introductory essay placed the Shaykh and the Imam in their respective historical contexts; and it thereafter briefly compared the two. These sections, however, acted as an important backdrop before it briefly surveyed and mentioned selected writings that focused on both scholars. It was observed that research on the Shaykh has blossomed over the past few decades and that interest in the Imam got off to a late start for several reasons. Nonetheless, it was important to provide this background for this special publication. It helped to put the essays that appear in this work in a broader scholarly context; and it showed how these chapters complement those works that have been published.

3.1 Its Structure:

The editors divided this book into two parts that contain complementary chapters. The first explores Shaykh Yusuf's life and works, and the second turns its focus to Imam 'Abdullah's life and ideas. While both personalities may be viewed as significant religious figures whose teachings and ideas impacted on generations of communities residing in both Indonesia and South Africa, they may also be viewed as non-state actors within the ambit of International Relations; their forced exile and banishment from the Melayu Archipelago indicates their status as political prisoners.

Phrased otherwise, since they were both socio-politically active in the VOC dominated Melayu Archipelago, they bravely stood up and fought against VOC administration's injustice and unfairness that were rampant. Even though they were unsuccessful to counter the VOC forces, they stood out as exemplary individuals whose religious ideas matched their activism to achieve social justice. They may not have been political figures in the tradition sense of the term, they may be classed as significant non-state actors that have since been viewed as individuals that were emancipators and liberators.

Having discussed, in short, about the structure of the book, let us now offer brief overviews of each chapter. However, we want to point out that we are grateful to Shaykh Luqman Rkiep for having shared his two poems that reflect on Tuan Guru specifically but that is also applicable to Shaykh Yusuf. For that reason, we inserted the one poem 'Karamat – Beacon of Lights' under the section on Shaykh Yusuf, and the other 'Immortal Soul' that covers Imam 'Abdullah.

3.2 The Chapters: A Synopsis

In the Shaykh Yusuf al-Makassari section, there are six chapters. The section opens the mentioned poem; and this was followed by Prof. Azra Azyumardi's informative chapter. Since Azyumardi wrote about the intellectual networks that connected Southeast Asia Muslim intellectuals with those in Southwest Asia as well as those far-flung areas outside these regions, the editors invited him to join the team of contributors and requested him to pen a chapter on Shaykh Yusuf. Having been familiar with these networks, his chapter illustrated where the Shaykh fitted into the 'Scholarly and Religio-Political Networks'. He thus set the scene for the chapters that followed.

Though Dr. Baharuddin Abd Rahman's chapter differed from the first chapter, it undertook a 'bibliographic review' of the works that had been written on the Shaykh. So, it essentially conducted a literature review; an approach that highlighted the phases of al-

Makassari's life and the treatises that he had written during these phases. Complementing the first two chapters, the philosopher-scholar Prof. Mustari Mustafā explored the Shaykh 'Al Makassari's Thinking: (by offering) A Philosophical Construction.' The chapter was originally written in Bahasa Indonesia; and it was translated into English as per request for this publication. While much of the focus was on the Shaykh Ontology, the shorter section was on his epistemology. In the process of unpacking these concepts, Prof. Mustafā juxtaposed the Shaykh's thoughts with those advocated by Hegel and Marx respectively.

At this point, Dr. Muzdalifah Sahib, who published a few works related to the Shaykh²⁷, opted to zoom in on the Shaykh's fundamental teachings. She analyzed in her chapter 'Tawhid's Impeccable Lustre: Essential Teachings of Shaykh Yusuf.' The title clearly indicates that she examined the concept of God's Oneness and how the Shaykh's ideas impacted on the communities that he served. Now compared to Dr. Sahib's focus, Prof. Yousuf Dadoo concentrated on one of the Shaykh's noteworthy manuscripts that was titled: Al-Nafha Al-Şaylāniyyah fī l-Minħa Al-Rahmāniyya; from this unpublished manuscript he appropriately extracted 'A Fountain of Spiritual Values' that was the chapter's sub-heading. Herein there were crucial Sufi concepts that he scrutinized and elaborated upon. He, however, used the Critical Discourse Analysis as a linguistic tool to explore these. And in the final chapter in this section. Prof. Suleman E. Dangor covered the Shaykh's 'Treatises: (by examining) Themes in Select Sufi Texts.' Unlike Dadoo who gave his attention to one manuscript, Dangor drew from a few of the Shaykh's manuscripts underscoring the authorities the Shaykh relied upon and the themes that the Shaykh tackled in some of his treatises.

Shifting to the Imam 'Abdullah ibn Qadi 'Abdus Salam (a.k.a. Tuan Guru) section, we indicated earlier that Luqman Rakiep's poem that venerates his great great-grand father appeared as its introductory segment. The first chapter was penned by Shafiq Morton; he examined the Imam's life that moved 'From Dar al-Islam to a Place of Sadness (that is, Cabo de Goede Hoop): (and in the process of doing that he provided an) Understanding (of) the struggles of Tuan Guru of Tidore at the Cape of Good Hope 1780-1807.' In this essay, Morton discussed the Imam's approach that was rooted in the wasatiyya of the Ba 'Alawi tradition. And he examined how the Imam embedded his idea of resistance in his Compendium.

Now the Imam's magnum opus referred to as the Compendium was used to comprehend his educational philosophy. Cape Town researcher and archivist, Ebrahim Salie was familiar with this work and he, like a few others, used it to examine 'Tuan Guru's Educational influence on the emerging colonial Cape Muslim Community (circa 18th and 19th centuries).' It basically narrated the Imam's teachings that deeply influenced how the nascent Muslim community encountered and understood the world at Cabo de Goede Hope during mentioned period.

At this point, the Rakiep brothers, who are the fifth descendants of the Imam, decided to reflect on their forebear by assessing 'Tuan Guru: His Relevance in the 21st Century.' Even though they too referred to the Compendium that contained the Imam's main ideas, they veered off by imposing their reading and understanding of their revered great-great-grandfather's thoughts. They did that to illustrate how these views were in sync and relevant to the 21st century Muslim communities. The final chapter that was written by Ebrahim Rhoda differed from the others in that he investigated the 'Da'wah (that was underway) During the Dutch and British Colonial Period.' Unlike the other chapters that concentrated on the Imam's struggle, his teaching, and relevance, Rhoda tried to show how the Imam's ideas influenced those who succeeded him and how they were able to draw inspiration from the Imam in an area called Mosterd Bay.

4. The Wrap-Up

As we close this introductory chapter and permit the reader to become absorbed in the different chapters, permit us to state that while the chapters are complementary to one another to an extent it should not be ignored that they do differ in their coverage and insights. On the whole, these chapters were written to provide the readers with a good grasp of how they - the contributors - evaluated the two noted personalities and in which way to appreciate their ideational teachings. This edited work, on this note, closes with an Afterword penned by the two editors.

5. Bibliography

- Abu Hamid. 2006. Syekh Yusuf Al-Makassari: Seorang Pejuang Yang Mengharumkan Nama Makassar. Unjung Pandang: Hasanuddin University.
- Abu Hamid. 1994. Shaykh Yusuf – Seorang Ulama, Sufi dan Pejuang. Jakarta Yayasan Obor Indonesia
- Arraiyyah, Muhammad Hamdar. 2019. Peran ulama Melayu-Indonesia dalam mengembangkan Islam di Cape Town sejak akhir abad XVII - awal abad XXI. Bangutapan - Bantal: Lintas Nalar.
- Azra, Azyumardi. 2004. The Origins of Islamic Reformism in Southeast Asia: Networks of Malay/Indonesian and Middle Eastern Ulama in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries. Honolulu: University of Hawai Press.
- Barnard, Timothy P. (Ed). 2004. Contesting Malayness. Singapore: Singapore University Press.
- Cense, Anton Abraham. 1950. "De Verering van Sjaich Jusuf in Zuid-Celebes". In Bingkisan Budi: Een Bundel Opstellen aan Phillipus Samuael van Ronkel door vrienden en leerlingen aangeboden op zijn tachtigste verjaardag 1 augustus 1950. Leiden: Sijthoff, pp 50-57.
- Cummings, William (Ed. & Trans.) 2007. The Makassar Annals. Leiden: KITLV Press. Bibliotheca Indonesica Series No. 35.

- Dadoo, Yousuf & Auwais Rafudeen (Eds.). 2020. Spiritual Path, Spiritual Reality: Selected Writing of Shaykh Yusuf of Macassar. Pretoria: UNISA.
- Dangor, Suleman Essop. 1994. Shaykh Yusuf. Durban: Iqra Publishers. Second Edition.
- Dangor, Suleman Essop. 1982. Shaykh Yusuf. Durban: Kat Bros. First Edition.
- Dangor, Suleman Essop. 1981. A Critical Biography of Shaykh Yusuf. Unpublished MA Thesis (Islamic Studies). Durban: University of Durban-Westville, pp.i-ix, & pp.1-80.
- Davids, Achmat. 1980. Mosques of the Bo-Kaap. Cape Town: The South African Institute of Arabic and Islamic Studies.
- Davids, Achmat. 1985. The History of the Tana Baru. Cape Town.
- Davids, Achmat. 1989. Manuscripts of Tuan Guru. In Quarterly Bulletin of the South African Library. 3(3):99-100, March.
- Davids, Achmat. 1994. Alternative Education: Tuan Guru and the formation of the Cape Muslim Community. In Pages from Cape Muslim History [Y. da Costa & A. Davids]. PMB: Shuter & Shooter. Ch. 3 pp. 47-56.
- Davids, Achmat 2011. The Afrikaans of the Cape Muslims (Eds. Hein Willemsse H & Suleman E. Dangor). Pretoria: Protea Book House.
- Drewes, GWJ. 1926. "Sjech Joesoep Makassar". In Djawa. VI: 83-88.
- Du Plessis, Izak D. 1972. 'Sheik Yusuf'. In Standard Encyclopedia of Southern Africa. Cape Town: Nasou Ltd. 11: 567.
- Greyling, Chris J A. 1980. 'Schech Yusuf: The Founder of Islam in South Africa'. In Religion in Southern Africa. 1(1): 9-21, January.
- Gosselink, Martine; Maria Holtrop & Robert Ross (Eds). 2017. Good Hope: South Africa and The Netherlands From 1600. Amsterdam: Rijks Museum.
- Hamka [Haji Abdul Malik Karim Amrullah] 1963 (reprint 1982 and 2009). "Sjeich Jusuf Tadju'l Chalwati (Tuantu Salamaka), 1926-1699". In Dari Perbendaharaan Lama. Medan: Madju & Jakarta: Diterbitkan Pustaka Panjimas & Pustaka Dini. Part 1 Ch. 6 pp.29-45.
- Haron, Muhammed. 1997. 'Towards a Catalogue of Islamic manuscripts in South Africa with special reference to the Melayu manuscripts at the Cape.' In Traditional Malay Writing (Ed. Wan Ali). Kuala Lumpur: National Library. Ch.10 pp.243-263.
- Jeffreys, Katherine M. 1938. Kramat at Zandvliet: The Malay Tombs of the Holy Circle at the Cape. In Cape Naturlist. 5: 157-163, June

- Jeffreys, Katherine M. 1939. Kramat at Zandvliet: The Malay Tombs of the Holy Circle at the Cape. In Cape Naturalist. 6:195-199, June
- Kahn, Joel S. 2006. Other Malays: Nationalism and Cosmopolitanism in the Modern Malay World. Singapore: ASAA Southeast Asia Publication Series.
- Lubbe, Gerrie. 1986. 'Tuan Guru: Prince, Prisoner, Pioneer'. In Religion in Southern Africa. 7(1): 24-35, January.
- Lubis, Nabilah. 1984. Zubdat al-Asraar fi Tahqiq Ba'dh Masyirib al-Ahyar karya Syekh Yusuf Attaj. PhD Tesis (Sebuah Kajian Filologi). Jakarta: IAIN Syarif Hidayatullah.
- Magassing, Ince Nurdin Daeng. 1933 (reprint 1981). Riwayatna Tuanta Salamaka Sehe Yusufu. Makassar: Volkedrukkerij. 197pp.
- Marasabessy, Bunyamin. 2004. 'Tuan Guru: The Cape Muslim Philosophy Education System'. In Makara, Sosial Humaniora. 8(3): 126-132.
- Marasabessy, Bunyamin and Mohammad Amin Faroek. 2005. Tuan Guru Imam Abdullah ibn Qadhi Abdussalam: Perlawanan Terhadap Imperialisme Belanda dan Pengasingan di Cape Town. Jakarta: Abdi Karyatama.
- Massiara, M.A. 1983. Syekh Yusuf Tuanta Salamaka dari Gowa. Jakarta: Yayasan LakiPadada.
- Morton, Shafiq. 2019. From the Spice Island to Cape Town: The Life and Times of Tuan Guru. Johannesburg: AwqafSA.
- Munazzah Hj Zakariyya. 1998. Katalog: Manuskrip Melayu di Afrika Selatan. Kuala Lumpur: Perpustakaan Negara.
- Paka, Abu Bakr. 1980. Syekh Yusuf dan Pengaruhnya. Skripsi. Ujung Pandang: Universitas Islam Alauddin.
- Rafudeen, Auwais. 2005. 'A Parallel Mode of Being: The Sanūsīyah and Intellectual Subversion in Cape Town, 1800-840- Part One'. In Journal for the Study of Religion. 18(1): 77-95
- Rafudeen, Auwais. 2005. 'A Parallel Mode of Being: The Sanūsīyah and Intellectual Subversion in Cape Town, 1800-1840- Part Two'. In Journal for the Study of Religion. 18(2): 23-38.
- Rafudeen, Auwais. 2006. The Aqidah of Tuan Guru. Cape Town: Author Publication.
- Rafudeen, Auwais. 2004. A Summary Extracted from the Compendium of Tuan Guru: Translation and Contextualization. Pretoria: NRF.
- Rakiep, Muttaqin. 2019. 'Quest after Ancestral Roots: Al-Haj Nurel Erefan Rakiep's (1922-2005) Story'. In Indonesia and South Africa: A South-South Partnership in the Making

(Eds. Muhammed Haron & Ardhya Erlangga Arby). Pretoria: Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia. Ch. 14 pp.109-119.

- Rakiep, Nurel Erefan. 1993. Tuan Guru Qadi of the Cape circa 1780-1807. Unpublished Festival of Art and Culture of the Indonesia Community of Asia & the Pacific Seminar Paper: Pekanbaru. September.
- Ramli, Muhammad.1990. Sejarah singkat Syekh Yusuf Tajul Khalawatia Tuanta Salama[ka]. Ujung Pandang: Suaka Peninggalan Sejarah dan Purbakala Sulawesi Selatan dan Tenggara.
- Ricci, Ronit. 2019. Introduction' and 'Nabi Adam: The Paradigmatic Exile'. In Banishment and Belonging: Exile and Diaspora in Sarandib. Cambridge: CUP. Ch. 1 pp.1-22 and Ch. 6 pp.125-148.
- Ricci, Ronit. 2014. 'Asian and Islamic Crossings: Malay Writing in nineteenth-century Sri Lanka'. In South Asian History and Culture. Cambridge: pp.1-17.
- Sahib, Muzdalifah. 2017.
- Sahib, Muzdalifah. 2014. Commentaries on the Work of Shaykh Yusuf al-Maqassary: Zubdat Asrar. Makassar: Alauddin University Press.
- Sahib, Muzdalifah. 2011/2014 (reprint 2017). Shaykh Yusuf al-Maqassary: His life story as a national hero from Gowa, South Sulawesi to Cape Town, South Africa and a Reformer in the Muslim World. Makassar: Alauddin University Press & Jakarta: Orbit Publishing.
- Sahib, Muzdalifah. 2019. Shaykh Yusuf al-Maqassari's Literary Contribution with special attention to his Matalib al-Salikin. Unpublished UNISA PhD Thesis.
- Sahib, Sultan 1982. Penilaian dan Penghargaan Masyarakat Gowa terhadap Shaykh Yusuf. Skripsi. Ujung Pandang: Universitas Islam Alauddin.
- Salie, Ebrahim. 2017. Shaykh Yusuf al-Makassari: Influence, Burial, Exhumation, and Repatriation, 1689-1705. In Muslims in VOC Cape Town. Cape Town: Author's Text – Unpublished. Part 1.
- Salie, Ebrahim. 2015. 'Imam Abdullah ibn Qadi Abdus-Salam and Comrades banished to Cabo de Goede Hoop'. In Eastern Muslim Aristocrats and Political Exiles at Cabo de Goede Hoop, 1658-1795. Cape Town: Author's Text - Unpublished. Ch. 18 pp. 534-580.
- Salie, Ebrahim. 2013. 'Shaykh Yusuf al-Makassari, Family and Descendants: Resistance, Dutch Colonialism and Aftermath with special reference to Cabo de Goede Hoop'. In Muslims in VOC Cape Town. Cape Town: Author's Text – Unpublished. Part 1.
- Sibali, Muh. Bachrun. 1989. Syeikh Yusuf Tuanta Salamaka: Ulama Pejuang Abad ke 17. Jakarta: Departemen Pendidikan dan Kebudayaan.

- Tudjimah. C.S. 1987. Syeikh Yusuf (SyekhJusuf Makassar) Makassar, Riwayat Hidup, Karya dan Ajarannya (Ed. Soegiarta Sriwibawa). Jakarta: Penerbit Universitas Indonesia.
- Van Selms, Adrianus. 1951. Arabies-Afrikaanse studies – Tweetalige (Arabies en Afrikaans) kategismus. Amsterdam: Noord-Hollandsche Uitgevers.
- Van Selms, Adrianus. 1953. “Die oudste boek in Afrikaans: Isjmoeni se ‘Betroubare woord”’ [The Oldest Book in Afrikaans: Ishmūnī’s Reliable word]. In Hertzog Annale van die Suid- Afrikaanse Akademie vir Wetenskap en Kuns. 2: 61–103.
- Van Selms, Adrianus.1968. ‘Yussuf (Joseph), Sjech’. In Dictionary of South African Bibliography (Ed. W. J. De Kock). Cape Town: National Council for Research. 1: 893-894.
- Von Kleist, Ewald Peter Jarislaf. 1986. Ein Indonesischer Muslim des 17 Jahrhundert in Sudafrica zwei sendscribeiben des scheichs Yusuf Makassar. MA Thesis. Freiburg: Albert-Ludwig University.
- Ward, Kerry. 2008. Networks of Empire: Forced Migration in the Dutch East India Company (VOC). Cambridge: CUP.
- Ward, Kerry. 2012. ‘Southeast Asian Migrants’. In Cape Town between East and West: Social Dynamics in a Dutch Colonial Town (ed. Nigel Wordon). Sunnyside, Johannesburg: Jacana Media. Ch. 4 pp.84-100.
- Willemse, Hein. 2020. Review ‘From the Spice Islands to Cape Town... In Tydskrif vir Letterkunde. 57(1): 138-139.

ENDNOTES

¹ Muhammed Haron. 1997. ‘Towards a Catalogue of Islamic manuscripts in South Africa with special reference to the Melayu manuscripts at the Cape.’. In Traditional Malay Writing (Ed. Wan Ali). Kuala Lumpur: National Library. Ch.10 pp.243-263; and Munazzah Hj Zakariya 1998. Katalog: Manuskrip Melayu di Afrika Selatan. . Kuala Lumpur: Perpustakaan Negara.

² The Dutch was popularly referred to the acronym: VOC; and consult Kerry Ward’s 2008 Networks of Empire and Gosselink, Holtrop and Ross’ 2017 edited publication titled Good Hope: South Africa and The Netherlands From 1600 that focused on the VOC’s Cape of Good Hope.

³ Throughout this publication the geo-political term ‘Melayu Archipelago’ was used instead of the Indonesian Archipelago or other geographical terms that referred to this region. Rather than making use of contemporary political-geographical terms that refer to nation-states, it employs the mentioned term for, at least, two reasons. The first reason is that long before the emergence of the nation-states, the colonial powers controlled disparate islands that formed a large portion of the Southeast Asian region; these they regarded as natural extensions of their socio-political and economic powers. The Melayu Archipelago was thereafter influenced by these colonial forces and the VOC emerged as the most powerful colonial authority that countered the Portuguese and British colonial authorities respectively. They referred to the sprawling set of islands as the Melayu Archipelago. The second reason is that the Archipelago’s disparate cultural communities spoke their dialects but, on top of that, was linguistically unified using Melayu as their lingua franca. This online site provides some interesting information: https://www.nationstates.net/nation=melayu_archipelago/detail=factbook/id=1267018.

⁴ Jeffreys 1938 and 1939.

⁵ Muhammad Hamdar Arraiyyah dealt with both religious scholars/figures in his book titled Peran ulama Melayu-Indonesia dalam mengembangkan Islam di Cape Town sejak akhir abad XVII - awal abad XXI (Bangutapan - Bantal: Lintas Nalar, 2019); a monograph that assessed the role of the Melayu Archipelago scholars in development of the Cape Muslims between the 17th and the 21st centuries. He invariably mentioned both Shaykh Yusuf and Imam ‘Abdullah as part of the pioneering religious leaders that impacted on the Cape Muslim community.

⁶ Drewes, GWJ. 1926. “Sjeh Joesoep Makassar”. In Djawa. VI: 83-88.

⁷ Anton Abraham Cense. 1950. “De Verering van Sjaich Jusuf in Zuid-Celebes”. In Bingkisan Budi: Een Bundel Opstellen aan Phillipus Samuël van Ronkel door vrienden en leerlingen aangeboden op zijn tachtigste verjaardag 1 augustus 1950. Leiden: Sijthoff, pp 50-57; Adrianus van Selms. 1968. ‘Yussuf (Joseph), Sjeh’. In Dictionary of South African Bibliography (Ed. W. J. De Kock). Cape Town: National Council for Research. 1: 893-894; Izak D. du Plessis. 1972. ‘Sheik Yusuf’. In Standard Encyclopedia of Southern Africa. Cape Town: Nasou Ltd. 11: 567; and Chris J.A. Greyling. 1980. ‘Shech Yusuf: The Founder of Islam in South Africa’. In Religion in Southern Africa. 1(1): 9-21, January.

⁸ Hamka [Haji Abdul Malik Karim Amrullah] 1963 (reprint 1982 and 2009). “Sjeich Jusuf Tadju’l Chalwati (Tuantu Salamaka), 1926-1699”. In Dari Perbendaharaan Lama. Medan: Madju & Jakarta: Diterbitkan Pustaka Panjimas & Pustaka Dini. Part 1 Ch. 6 pp.29-45.

⁹ Abu Hamid. 1994. Shaykh Yusuf – Seorang Ulama, Sufi dan Pejuang. Jakarta Yayasan Obor Indonesia; Azyumardi Azra. 2004. The Origins of Islamic Reformism in Southeast Asia: Networks of Malay/Indonesian and Middle Eastern ‘Ulama in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press. Nabilah Lubis. 1984. Zubdat al-Asraar fi Tahqiq Ba’dh Masyirib al-Ahyar karya Syeikh Yusef Attaj. PhD Tesis (Sebuah Kajian Filologi). Jakarta: IAIN Syarif Hidayatullah.

¹⁰ Sultan Sahib 1982. Penilaian dan Penghargaan Masyarakat Gowa terhadap Shaykh Yusuf. Skripsi. Ujung Pandang: Universitas Islam Alauddin.

¹¹ Abu Bakr Paka. 1980. Syekh Yusuf dan Pengaruhnya. Skripsi. Ujung Pandang: Universitas Islam Alauddin.

¹² Suleman Essop Dangor. 1982. Shaykh Yusuf. Durban: Kat Bros. First Edition; and Suleman Essop Dangor. A Critical Biography of Shaykh Yusuf. MA Thesis (Islamic Studies). Durban: University of Durban-Westville, pp.1-ix, & pp.1-80.

¹³ Ewald Peter Jarislaf von Kleist. 1986. Ein Indonesischer Muslim des 17. Jahrhunderts in Sudafrika zwei sendescreiben des scheichs Yusuf Makassar. MA Thesis. Freiburg: Albert-Ludwig University.

¹⁴ M.A. Massiara. 1983. Syekh Yusuf Tuanta Salamaka dari Gowa. Jakarta: Yayasan Lakipadada; C.S. Tudjimah. 1987. Syekh Yusuf (Syekh Jusuf Makassar) Makassar, Riwayat Hidup, Karya dan Ajarannya (Ed. Soegiarta Sriwibawa). Jakarta: Penerbit Universitas Indonesia; Muh. Bachrun Sibali. 1989. Syekh Yusuf Tuanta Salamaka: Ulama Pejuang Abad ke 17. Jakarta: Departemen Pendidikan dan Kebudayaan; and Muhammad Ramli, 1990. Sejarah singkat Syekh Yusuf Tajul Khalawatia Tuanta Salama[ka]. Ujung Pandang: Suaka Peninggalan Sejarah dan Purbakala Sulawesi Selatan dan Tenggara.

¹⁵ Ince Nurdin Daeng Magassing. 1933 (reprint 1981). Riwayatna Tuanta Salamaka Sehe Yusufu. Makassar: Volkedrukkerij.

¹⁶ Gerrie Lubbe. 1986. ‘Tuan Guru: Prince, Prisoner, Pioneer’. In Religion in Southern Africa. 7(1): 24-35, January.

¹⁷ Achmat Davids. 1985. The History of the Tana Baru. Cape Town. Achmat Davids. 1994. Alternative Education: Tuan Guru and the formation of the Cape Muslim Community. In Pages from Cape Muslim History [Y. da Costa & A. Davids]. PMB: Shuter & Shooter. Ch. 3 pp. 47-56. Achmat Davids. 1989. Manuscripts of Tuan Guru. In Quarterly Bulletin of the South African Library. 3(3):99-100, March.

¹⁸ Nurel Erefaan Rakiép. 1993. Tuan Guru Qadi of the Cape circa 1780-1807. Unpublished Festival of Art and Culture of the Indonesia Community of Asia & the Pacific Seminar Paper: Pekanbaru. September. And the latter’s son’s essay on him: Muttaqin Rakiép. 2019. ‘Quest after Ancestral Roots: Al-Haj Nurel Erefan Rakiép’s (1922-2005) Story’. In Indonesia and South Africa: A South-South Partnership in the Making (Eds. Muhammed Haron & Ardhya Erlangga Arby). Pretoria: Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia. Ch. 14 pp.109-119.

¹⁹ Bunyamin Marasabessy. 2004. ‘Tuan Guru: The Cape Muslim Philosophy Education System’. In Makara, Sosial Humaniora. 8(3): 126-132.

²⁰ Auwais Rafudeen. 2005. ‘A Parallel Mode of Being: The Sanūsīyah and Intellectual Subversion in Cape Town, 1800-840- Part One’. In Journal for the Study of Religion. 18(1): 77-95; Auwais Rafudeen. 2005. ‘A Parallel Mode of Being: The Sanūsīyah and Intellectual Subversion in Cape Town, 1800-1840- Part Two’. In Journal for the Study of Religion. 18(2): 23-38; Auwais Rafudeen. 2006. The Aqidah of Tuan Guru. Cape Town:

Author Publication; and Auwais Rafudeen. 2004. A Summary Extracted from the Compendium of Tuan Guru: Translation and Contextualization. Pretoria: NRF.

²¹ Shafiq Morton. 2019. From the Spice Island to Cape Town: The Life and Times of Tuan Guru – For the Younger Readers. Johannesburg: AwqafSA.

²² Bunyamin Marasabessy and Mohammad Amin Feroek. 2005. Tuan Guru Imam Abdullah ibn Qadhi Abdussalam: Perlawanan Terhadap Imperialisme Belanda dan Pengasingan di Cape Town. Jakarta: Abdi Karyatama.

²³ Hein Willemsse. 2020. Review 'From the Spice Islands to Cape Town... In Tydskrif vir Letterkunde. 57(1): 138-139.

²⁴ One may refer to Honorable Amb Al-Farisi's speech at the launch of Morton's book on 17 March 2021; see <https://www.thediplomaticsociety.com/16-home/2731-tuan-guru-a-great-figure-of-indonesian-remembrance-in-south-africa>.

²⁵ Prof. Laffan's talk titled 'Tuan Guru: An Exploration of the Imam through new narratives' may be found on Voice of the Cape site: <https://www.vocfm.co.za/tuan-guru-exploration-imam-new-narratives>; it was delivered on 29 September 2017. In a subsequent event that was held on 24 October 2017 at the Leiden-based International Institute for Asian Studies, he elaborated on the topic 'Who was Tuan Guru?' Online: <https://www.iias.asia/event/who-was-tuan-guru>. He also participated in the Smithsonian National Museum for Asian Art Symposium between 14 and 16 September 2020; at this symposium, he presented a paper that addressed 'Becoming Tuan Guru: Finding Greater Java in Southern Africa, 1780-1807. Online: <https://asia.si.edu/research/scholarly-programs/africasia-overlooked-histories-of-exchange/>

²⁶ Quite a few of Ebrahim Salie's invaluable works-in-progress have been uploaded; and among those are the studies on the Shaykh and the Imam. They can be accessed online: <https://independent.academia.edu/ESalie>

²⁷ See the following published and unpublished texts. Sahib, Muzdalifah. 2014. Commentaries on the Work of Shaykh Yusuf al-Maqassary: Zubdat Asrar. Makassar: Alauddin University Press; Muzdalifah Sahib. 2011/2014 (reprint 2017). Shaykh Yusuf al-Maqassary: His life story as a national hero from Gowa, South Sulawesi to Cape Town, South Africa and a Reformer in the Muslim World. Makassar: Alauddin University Press & Jakarta: Orbit Publishing; and Muzdalifah Sahib. 2019. Shaykh Yusuf al-Maqassari's Literary Contribution with special attention to his Matalib al-Salikin. Unpublished UNISA PhD Thesis.

Part 1

Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari

KARAMATS – Beacons of Light

Luqman bin Nurel-Erefan Rakiep

At the southern-most tip of Africa, their tombs of mortar and clay majestically reaching out to the open sky, overlooking land and sea , they lay.

Where the life-giving currents of the Indian and Atlantic meet, in memory of a creed, in death alive, they pray.

Like sentinels in the heart of night, in a rough circle around the Cape against calamity, such as, famine, tidal waves and earthquake they guard.

Testimony thus they bear and truth uphold of inspired words by the Guru, in years long ago...

Years that speaks for past and present of atrocity and deprivation...

Oh, so dark!!!

Yet these men of God – Auliya Allah – unsung heroes, by history books denied have left on life at the Cape an indelible mark.

In captivity, as exiles, they came to the Cape of Storms by sea, victims of ‘civilisation’ – the colonial crusade –
in their motherland.

Warriors, armed with a spirit tempered by a timeless will of faith, the soil of Africa they've accepted as their own.

Their hearts afflicted by pain, but which refused to beat to no rhythm than nafyu wal ithbat:

La ilaha illa Allah went out to those who were denied;

Those who suffered loss of birth and human right at the hand of the one-eyed – the colonial 'master' with the wanton eye, which only the temporal world perceives in a quest to satisfy and make grow... the ego.

In all the pain and suffering these freedom fighters, who've overcome the self, called upon their Master to illumine and protect, the hearts of those oppressed.

Purposefully, they've acted out their human cause, as beacons of Light showing the Path.

Human barriers of colour, language, race and creed they've overcome with a collective energy, and provided a sanctuary –

Al-Islam

For the oppressed they've established a vibrant way of life, by which they can become... Worthy of a Promise Divine:

Rabi-ul-Thani 1414

September 1993

Notes :

nafyu wal ithbat (denial and affirmation)

La ilaha illa Allah (there is no deity, but Allah)

Shaykh Yusuf Through Pictures

(I)

ARTIST IMPRESSIONS

Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari : a Transnational Hero
(Source : <https://www.iol.co.za/> (left) & <https://www.vocfm.co.za> (right))

Offshore view of Cape Town's harbour and Table Mountain at the background in a painting by Aernout Smit (1641-1710) from 1683. (Wikimedia Commons)
(Source : <https://sulsel.idntimes.com/>)

Mapping the Shaykh's Routes

The Route : From Makassar to the Cape of Good Hope

Shaykh Yusuf's Maqam : Gowa, South Sulawesi, Indonesia

(Source : <https://sulsel.idntimes.com>)

Ceylon to the Cape : The Ship

The Plaque : The arrival of Shaykh Yusuf
(Source : <https://www.transtipo.com>)

Shaykh Yusuf's Maqam : Cape Town, Western Cape, South Africa
(Source : <https://www.vocfm.co.za>)

Artist Perspectives : Connecting Shaykh Yusuf and Nelson Mandela

[in-Box translation : “Syech Yusuf from Bugis, an inspiration for Nelson Mandela's struggle”]
(Source : <https://www.voa-islam.com>)

CHAPTER ONE

Shaykh Muhammad Yusuf Al-Makassari (1037-1111/1627-99): Scholarly and Religio-Political Networks

Azyumardi Azra, CBE

Abstract

Over the past few years, several studies devoted to Al-Makassari in Indonesia and South Africa as well as elsewhere. Most of them either focused only on his career in the Archipelago or when he was exiled at Cabo de Goede Hoop. Since very little attention has been given to his scholarly connections within the international networks of ‘ulama’ ([learned] Muslim scholars), this chapter seeks to outline and reflect on his scholarly and religio-political networks; links that demonstrated how he forged these through his personal efforts. The first part traces the geographical cum educational networks that started in the Archipelago and that ended up in the Arabian Peninsula; and after his long stay there, he returned to eventually settle in Banten where he stood up against the VOC. After a long anti-VOC struggle, Al-Makassari was defeat and exiled to Ceylon and then to Cabo de Goede Hoop. The second part discussed and analyzed his neo-Sufi stance within the established socio-educational structures. Al-Makassari’s contributions to these via his writings and as a Sufi Shaykh placed him in a unique position as a key reformist in that region and beyond.

Keywords: Shaykh Yusuf, Religio-Political Networks, Scholarship, Exiled, Ceylon, Cabo de Goede Hoop

1. Introduction

There is no doubt that Muhammad Yusuf Al-Makassari, one of the most important renewers of the Muslim tradition in the Archipelago, brings us into a vast region, from South Sulawesi (Celebes) and West Java, to Arabia, Ceylon, and South Africa. To have a better grasp of Al-Makassari’s role in the development and advancement of Islam in these places, we must also deal in passing with the religious and intellectual life of the Muslims in these areas. And there is no doubt either that Al-Makassari represents a perfect example of the post-colonial history of Muslim intellectualism and activism.

There have been several studies devoted to Al-Makassari, both in Indonesia and South Africa.¹ But most of them either center only on his career in the Archipelago or when he was in exile at Cabo de Goede Hoop; very little attention has been given to his scholarly connections within the international networks of ‘ulama’ ([learned] Muslim scholars). This fails not only to trace the origins of Al-Makassari’s teachings, but to also recognize his role as one of the early transmitters of Muslim reformism to the region where he lived.

2. From Sulawesi to Banten, Aceh to Arabia and Beyond

Muhammad Yusuf b. ‘Abd Allah Abd al-Mahasin al-Taj al-Khalwati Al-Makassari, also known in Sulawesi as Tuanta Salamaka ri Gowa (Our Gracious Master from Gowa), according to the Annals of Gowa, was born in 1037/1627.² Despite myth and legends concerning the parents and events surrounding the birth of Al-Makassari, probably fabricated after his death; what is more important is that his family was among those which had been fully Islamized.

As a result, from his early years of life, prior to his departure to Arabia, Al-Makassari was educated according to Muslim tradition. He initially learned to read the Qur’an with a local teacher named Daeng ri Tasammang. Later, he studied Arabic, fiqh, tauhid, and tasawwuf with Sayyid Ba ‘Alwi b. ‘Abd Allah al-‘Allamah al-Tahir, an Arab preacher who lived in Bontoala at that time. When he was 15 years of age, he continued his studies in Cikoang, where he studied with Jalal al-Din al-Aydid, a peripatetic teacher, who was reported to have come from Aceh to Kutai, Kalimantan, before finally settling down in Cikoang.³

The accounts of Al-Makassari’s initial religious education once again emphasize the nature of Islamic development in Sulawesi - as also the case in many parts of the Archipelago, namely, that wandering scholars, many of them sufi, played a crucial role in converting and teaching the native population. However, they came to Sulawesi in a much later period in comparison with their coming to the western part of the Archipelago; only after the second half of the sixteenth century, do we find evidence of their presence in the region. It was in the early seventeenth century that these peripatetic teachers, coming from Aceh, Minangkabau, South Kalimantan (Borneo), Java, the Malay Peninsula, and the Southwest Asia, succeeded in converting large numbers of the population of Sulawesi. They gained much greater success after the local rulers embraced Islam.⁴

Thus, in the period when Al-Makassari was born, Islam was gaining firmer roots in South Sulawesi. By the third decade of the seventeenth century, the newly Islamized rulers made their attempts to translate some doctrines of the shari’ah into the political organization of their kingdoms. Religious posts such as imam (prayer leader), khatib (reciter of the Friday sermon), and qadi (judge) were created, and their holders were included among the nobility.⁵ With the creation of these offices, many wandering scholars were encouraged to stay. Al-Makassari was able to acquire a rudimentary Muslim education in his own region. However, it is important to note that doctrines of Islamic law were adopted only to a limited degree, especially those concerning familial matters, which were incorporated into local customs variously called pangaderreng or panngadakkang.

Returning from Cikoang, Al-Makassari married a daughter of the Sultan of Gowa, ‘Ali al-Din, also known locally as Mangarangi Daeng Maurabiya (r. 1001-46/1591-1636). Al-Makassari apparently had long-cherished an ambition to pursue further studies in the Arabian Peninsula’s Haramayn; it can be expected that his teachers of Arab origin gave him a further incentive toward learning Islam there. Al-Makassari left Makassar for Arabia in the month of Rajab 1054/September 1644.⁶ Makassar, it is worth noting, was an important harbor in the eastern part of the Archipelago, and from the second half of the fifteenth century it had been frequented by Malay-Indonesian and foreign traders. It had links, in the inter-insular trading networks, with Banten and other harbors on north Java as well as with Malacca, and Aceh. Al-Makassari took advantage of the trading networks. He boarded a Malay ship that took him to Banten (Bantam).⁷

The Sultanate of Banten was one of the most important Muslim kingdoms on Java. When Al-Makassari arrived in Banten, the reigning ruler was Abu al-Mafakhir ‘Abd al-Qadir (r. 1037-63/1626-51) who was granted the title of Sultan by the Sharif of Mecca in 1048/1638. He, evidently, had a special interest in religious matters; he sent inquiries about religious matters not only to al-Raniri but also to scholars in the Haramayn, which resulted in special works written by those scholars, answering his questions.⁸ As a result, Banten became known as one of the most important Muslim centers on Java, and it is highly possible that Al-Makassari also studied there. Not least important, he was able to establish close personal relations with the elite of the Bantenese Sultanate, especially with the Crown Prince, Pangeran Surya, who would succeed his father, Abu al-Mafakhir, as the Sultan with the official name ‘Abd al-Fattah, better known as Sultan Ageng Tirtayasa.

Following the route of the interinsular trade, Al-Makassari departed for Aceh. It is reported⁹ that while he was in Banten, he had already heard about al-Raniri and intended to study with him. Meanwhile, al-Raniri had left Aceh for his home of birth, Raniri, in 1054/1644. Since Al-Makassari departed from Makassar in the same year, it is unlikely that they met in Aceh. However, Al-Makassari in his work Safinat al-Najah, before giving his complete silsilah (chain) of the Qadiriyyah tariqah (order), has the following to say:

*As for the chains of initiation of the khalifah al-Qadiriyyah, I take it from my Shaykh and prop (sandaran), the learned and prominent, the wise and inimitable, who possesses the sciences of shari’ah and haqiqah, exploring ma’rifah and tariqah, my master and teacher (guru), Shaykh Nur al-Din b. Hasanji b. Muhammad Humayd al-Qurayshi al-Raniri; may God purify his spirit and illuminate his tomb.*¹⁰

Considering this account, it is likely that Al-Makassari followed al-Raniri to India, where, as al-Attas points out, he studied also with ‘Umar b. ‘Abd Allah Ba Shayban, al-Raniri’s teacher.¹¹ If this is so, he must have been introduced to BA Shayban by al-Raniri; and they must have met only in the Gujarat region since, so far as we are aware, Ba Shayban never traveled to the Malay-Indonesian world.

Probably, it is from the Gujarat coast that Al-Makassari continued his travels to the Arabian Peninsula. His first destination was the Yemen, where he studied mostly in Zabid, with Muhammad b. ‘Abd al-Baqi al-Naqshbandi, Sayyid ‘Ali al-Zabidi, and Muhammad b. al-Wajih al-Sa’di al-Yamani.¹² We have mentioned earlier that Muhammad b. ‘Abd al-Baqi al-Mizjaji al-Naqshbandi (d.1074/1664), probably the most important scholar of the Mizjaji family in the seventeenth century, was one of the scholars al-Sinkili came into contact with while in the Yemen. ‘Abd al-Baqi was in fact the predecessor of the Mizjaji scholars who played an increasingly important role in the expansion of the networks to many parts of the Muslim world.

Voll¹³ suggested that by the beginning of the eighteenth century, the Mizjajis had been identified with the Naqshbandiyyah order. The association certainly began with ‘Abd al-Baqi, since, as al-Muhibbi points out,¹⁴ he was initiated into the order by Taj al-Din al-Hindi, the leading shaykh of the Naqshbandiyyah in Mecca. Al-Makassari tells us that he took the Naqshbandiyyah tariqah from ‘Abd al-Baqi.¹⁵ He does not make mention of other sciences that he learned from ‘Abd al-Baqi; therefore, we can assume that Al-Makassari primarily studied tasawwuf with him.

The second major teacher of Al-Makassari in Yemen was simply named Sayyid ‘Ali al-Zabidi or ‘Ali b. Abu Bakr according to Al-Makassari’s silsilah of the Ba ‘Alwiyyah tariqah.¹⁶ It is difficult to identify this scholar in Arabic sources, because his is a very common name. But his identification with Zabid helps us in some way. Al-Muhibbi mentions two ‘Alis, one of whom could be a teacher of Al-Makassari, not only because of his connection with al-Sinkili but also with the larger networks; he is ‘Ali bin Muhammad b. al-Shaybani al-Zabidi, as described later.

To take Al-Makassari’s silsilah of the Ba ‘Alwiyyah into account, it is possible that Sayyid ‘Ali was ‘Ali b. Muhammad b. Abu Bakr b. Muthayr, who died in Zabid in 1084/1673. The Muthayr scholars had played some role in the networks; previously it has been mentioned two of the Muthayr scholars, namely, Muhammad b. Abu Bakr and Ahmad Abu al-‘Abbas, in connection with al-Sinkili. ‘Alib. Muthayr (al-Zabidi) was known as a Sufi and muhaddith. Al-Muhibbi, however, simply mentions that ‘Ali adhered to the tariqah of the Ahl al-Sunnah wa al-Jama’ah (the people of the Sunnah and community, or the mainstream of the Sunni); no explicit mention is made of the Ba ‘Alwiyyah tariqah, although the order surely can be included among the tariqahs with which the Ahl al-Sunnah wa al-Jama’ah was affiliated.¹⁷

It is also possible that Sayyid ‘Ali was actually ‘Ali b. Muhammad b. al-Shaybani al-Zabidi (d.1072/1661). Al-Muhibbi, citing Mushtafa b. Fath Allah al-Hamawi, his colleague, tells us that ‘Ali al-Zabidi was a great muhaddith of Yemen and the leader of men of learning in Zabid. He initially studied in his hometown with Muhammad b. al-Shiddiq al-Khashsh al-Zabidi or Ishaq Ibn Ja’mān - both mentioned earlier in connection with al-Sinkili. ‘Ali continued his studies in the Haramayn, receiving tariqahs from Ahmad al-Qushashi. He was also active in teaching hadith; among those who studied hadith with him were Ibrahim al-Kurani, Ibn ‘Abd al-Rasul al-Barzanji, and Hasan al-‘Ajami. He died in Zabid.¹⁸ ‘Ali al-Zabidi’s connections with these scholars, who were teachers of Jawi students, including Al-Makassari himself, made it possible for ‘Ali to meet and teach Al-Makassari. We cannot go further, since there is no indication that he was a shaykh of the Ba ‘Alwiyyah tariqah.

Al-Makassari does not inform us of the date of his sojourn in Yemen, but it, probably, took several years before he continued his travels to the heart of the networks in the Haramayn. His period of study in Mecca and Medina coincided with that of al-Sinkili. Therefore, it can be assumed that Al-Makassari studied with scholars who were also the teachers of al-Sinkili. The most important among his teachers in the Haramayn were familiar names in the networks like Ahmad al-Qushashi, Ibrahim al-Kurani, and Hasan al-‘Ajami.¹⁹

Al-Makassari's relationship with al-Kurani was apparently close. It is known that he was entrusted by al-Kurani to copy al-Durrat al-Fakhirah, and Risalah fi al-Wujud, both works of Nur al-Din al-Jami (d.898/1492), and a commentary on the first work by 'Abd al-Ghafur al-Lari (d.912/1506). Al-Kurani himself later wrote a commentary on al-Durrat al-Fakhirah called al-Tahrirat al-Bahirah li Mabahith al-Durrat al-Fakhirah.²⁰ All of these works attempt to reconcile opposing positions between the Muslim theologians and philosophers on several philosophical issues concerning God. It has been suggested that Al-Makassari studied these three works under al-Kurani when he was copying them.²¹

Unlike al-Sinkili, Al-Makassari does not specify the religious sciences he studied with the above scholars. He mentions them primarily in connection with his teachings and tariqah silsilahs or in concluding notes, toward the end of some of his works. Considering their scholarly discourse and the kind of teachings he attributed to them, it is fair to assume that in addition to tasawwuf, Al-Makassari studied hadith, tafsir, fiqh, and other branches of Islamic sciences with them.

Aside from the above scholars, Al-Makassari mentions his other teachers in the Haramayn: Muhammad al-Mazru (al-Madani), 'Abd al-Karim al-Lahuri, and Muhammad Muraz al-Shami.²² While I fail to identify the first scholar, the second was very likely 'Abd al-Karim al-Hindi al-Lahuri, who settled in the Haramayn, and flourished in the eleventh/seventeenth century. He appears to have also been involved in the networks; he was an acquaintance of 'Abd Allah al-Bashri, Ahmad al-Nakhli, Taj al-Din al-Qal'i, and Abu Thahir al-Kurani.²³ We may expect that through 'Abd al-Karim al-Lahuri, Al-Makassari learned much about the Indian tradition of Islamic learning.

As for Muhammad Muraz al-Shami, he was most probably Muhammad Mirza b. Muhammad al-Dimashqi. This is because the copyists of Al-Makassari's works obviously misspelled the names of several of his teachers. They, for instance, wrote "Muhammad al-Zujuji al-Naqshbandi" instead of Muhammad (b. 'Abd al-Baqi) al-Mizjaji al-Naqshbandi or "Muhammad Baqi Allah al-Lahuri" instead of 'Abd al-Karim al-Lahuri or Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Baqi al-Naqshbandi.²⁴

We have other reasons to identify Muhammad Mirza as a teacher of Al-Makassari. First, he was a student of Taj al-Din al-Hindi al-Naqshbandi. Like Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Baqi al-Mizjaji, Muhammad Mirza was initiated by Taj al-Din into the Naqshbandiyyah order in Mecca; they may be expected to have been friends. Since Al-Makassari had received the order earlier from 'Abd al-Baqi, it is possible that he later recommended Al-Makassari to study with Muhammad Mirza when he left Yemen for the Haramayn. Muhammad Mirza migrated from Damascus and lived in Medina for 40 years before he finally moved to Mecca, where he died in 1066/1656, after only two years there. Muhammad Mirza, mainly known as a Sufi, attempted to reinterpret Ibn 'Arabi's doctrines in more understandable terms that people could comprehend.²⁵

Unlike al-Sinkili, who returned directly to the Melayu Archipelago/Malay-Indonesian world after studying in the Haramayn, Al-Makassari traveled to Damascus, another important center of Muslim learning in Southwest Asia. It appears that Muhammad Mirza recommended that it would be good for Al-Makassari to study there. But it is also possible that Ahmad al-Qushashi encouraged him to go to Damascus and study with one of its leading scholars, Ayyub b. Ahmad b. Ayyub al-Dimashqi al-Khalwati (994-1071/1586-1661). As we have already noted, al-Qushashi was a close friend of Ayyub al-Khalwati.

Ayyub al-Khalwati was born and died in Damascus. He was a renowned Sufi and muhaddith of Syria. His education included both exoteric sciences, such as hadith, tafsir, and fiqh as well esoteric sciences like tasawwuf and kalam. Both al-Hamawi and Al-Muhibbi call him al-ustadh al-akbar (great teacher), and they claim that nobody else in Damascus was as learned as he was during his time. Sultan Ibrahim, the ruler of Syria, often consulted him in matters relating to Islamic law and mysticism.²⁶ Ayyub al-Khalwat was also a prolific writer. His writings mainly deal with tasawwuf, kalam, hadith and Khalwatiyyah rituals. He attempted to give a new interpretation of Ibn ‘Arabi’s doctrines, particularly concerning the concept of al-Insan al-Kamil (“Perfect Man” or “Universal Man”), in light of the shari’ah. Ayyub al-Khalwati also had extensive networks by way of hadith studies. His scholarly reputation made his halqahs popular with students from various parts of the Muslim world, such as the Maghreb region, Arabia Peninsula, South Asia, and Southeast Asia.

Al-Makassari does not tell us when the period of his study with Ayyub al-Khalwati took place, but Al-Makassari evidently accompanied him for some time. After exhibiting his talent for absorbing the exoteric and esoteric sciences, he was able to win the favor of Ayyub al-Khalwati. The latter awarded him the title of Taj al-Khalwati (the Crown of the al-Khalwati). Al-Makassari in his works, highly praises Ayyub al-Khalwati and mentions him in his silsilah of the Khalwatiyyah tariqah.²⁷ The way Al-Makassari refers to Ayyub al-Khalwati could lead one to assume that this Damascene scholar was simply a great Sufi, but in fact he was also a leading expert in Islamic law. After studying in Damascus, Al-Makassari is said to have continued his travels to Istanbul.²⁸ Traditional accounts of Al-Makassari’s life which circulate in South Sulawesi tell the story of his journey in the Negeri Rum (Turkey), but we have no other sources to corroborate them.²⁹

According to Gowa sources, while he was in Mecca, Al-Makassari had begun to teach. As one might expect, most of his students were of Malay-Indonesian origin, both from the hajj pilgrims and the Jawah community in the Haramayn. Among his students in Mecca was ‘Abd al-Bashir al-Darir al-Rapani (from Rappang, South Sulawesi), who later was responsible for spreading the Naqshbandiyyah and Khalwatiyyah orders in South Sulawesi.³⁰ Furthermore, Al-Makassari is reported to have married the daughter of a Shafi’i Imam in Mecca, but his wife died when she gave birth to a child, and Al-Makassari remarried a woman of Sulawesi origin in Jeddah before he finally returned to the Archipelago.³¹

3. From Banten to Ceylon to Cabo de Goede Hoop/Cape of Good Hope

It is not very clear when Al-Makassari returned to the Archipelago. Hamid and Bruinessen respectively point out that he returned in 1075/1664 and 1083/1672,³² but we are not able to substantiate this, for other sources do not supply us with the date of Al-Makassari’s return. However, if these dates are correct, it means that he spent between 20 to 28 years traveling in search for knowledge. There are also conflicting accounts of whether Al-Makassari returned directly to his homeland, Gowa, or went directly to Banten.

Hamka,³³ Amansyah,³⁴ Mattulada,³⁵ and Pelras³⁶ all maintain that Al-Makassari initially returned to South Sulawesi before he proceeded to Banten. On the other hand, Hamid,³⁷ Labbakang,³⁸ and Dangor,³⁹ believe that Al-Makassari settled in Banten when he returned to the Archipelago and never came back to Gowa. We will discuss these two conflicting accounts and attempt to consider which one is the more plausible.

3.1 From the Arabian Peninsula to Gowa to Banten

According to the first opinion, when Al-Makassari returned from Arabia to Gowa, South Sulawesi, he found that Muslim precepts were not being practiced by the Muslim population; remnants of contra-Islamic local beliefs continued to hold sway. Although the ruler and nobility had long declared themselves Muslims, they were reluctant to apply the doctrine of Islamic law in their realms. They were unwilling or unable to prohibit gambling, cock-fighting, arrack drinking, opium smoking, and the like. They, in fact, promoted superstitious practices such as giving offerings to the spirit of the ancestors in the hope that the latter would bring them prosperity.

Having witnessed such a sorry state of religious life, Al-Makassari appealed to the Gowa ruler and notables to abolish all such practices and to implement Islamic law. However, the ruler insisted on maintaining the status-quo; abolishing gambling and opium smoking, for instance, would have meant reducing financial gains.⁴⁰ As a result, Al-Makassari departed to Banten, where he established his career. He left behind him, however, several outstanding disciples, such as Nur al-Din b. ‘Abd al-Fattah, ‘Abd al-Bashir al-Darir and ‘Abd al-Qadir Karaeng Jeno.

It is apparent that the account of Al-Makassari’s return to Gowa is based on Hamka’s article, one of the earliest writings on Al-Makassari in the Indonesian language. The problem with Hamka’s article is that it relies heavily on oral tradition which has passed through many generations. It is difficult to sift fact from myth in such oral histories, and we have no written sources to substantiate them.

The spread of Al-Makassari’s teachings and works in South Sulawesi did not necessarily require Al-Makassari’s physical presence in the region. All of his students are reported to have studied with him either in the Haramayn or in Banten. Furthermore, from the middle of the seventeenth century, Muslims from South Sulawesi increasingly came to Banten in large numbers. They also played an important role in spreading Al-Makassari’s teachings and works when they returned to their own regions.⁴¹

It is more plausible, therefore, that Al-Makassari returned to Banten rather than to Gowa. He may have planned to stay there temporarily on his way back to his homeland, but later developments made him change his mind. After several months in Banten, he married the daughter of Sultan Ageng Tirtayasa.⁴² It is worth remembering that Al-Makassari and the Sultan had been friends before the former left for Arabia. Thus, when Al-Makassari returned with scholarly credentials and prestige, Sultan Ageng, by any means, including by marriage, attempted to keep him in Banten.

Sultan Ageng Tirtayasa (r. 1053-96/1651-83) was undoubtedly the last great ruler of the Bantenese Sultanate. Under his rule, the Sultanate reached its golden age. Its port became an important center of international trade in the Archipelago. The Bantenese traded with traders from England, Denmark, China, Indo-China, India, Persia, the Philippines, and Japan. The ships of the Sultanate sailed the Archipelago, representing the last powerful trading power of the Malay-Indonesian kingdoms.⁴³

Sultan Ageng was a fervent enemy of the Dutch; his accession to the throne resumed the long-standing conflicts between the Bantenese and the Dutch who had fought wars in 1028/1619 and 1043-9/1633-9. Peace settlements which were achieved after the wars could not hold for very long. Sultan Ageng's fleet, modelled after those of the Europeans, attacked the Dutch posts in Sumatra. He made Banten a safe haven for fighters from elsewhere in the Archipelago in wars against the Dutch as well as for fugitives from Dutch prisons.⁴⁴ For the Dutch, who now fortified themselves in Batavia, Sultan Ageng was a major stumbling block in their territorial expansion in the Archipelago.

Sultan Ageng Tirtayasa, like his father, Sultan Abu al-Mafakhir 'Abd al-Qadir, had a special interest in religion. The political and diplomatic relations with the Muslim rulers, particularly with the Sharifs of Mecca continued to flourish; this was a tradition that had been established by his father. Contemporaneous Dutch sources⁴⁵ also note that Sultan Ageng was able to establish relations with Surat and other Muslim kingdoms on the coastal region of the South Asian sub-continent.

Moreover, he sent his son, 'Abd al-Qahhar, on a diplomatic mission to Istanbul; this was in conjunction with the latter's hajj pilgrimages to Mecca which were done respectively from 1080/1669 to 1082/1671, and from 1085/1674 to 1087/1676. During the time of Sultan Ageng, scholars and students from various parts of the Muslim world continued to come to Banten. Sultan Ageng himself, most of the time, was accompanied by these Muslim scholars.⁴⁶ Thus, he was able to maintain the reputation of Banten as an important center of Islamic learning in the Archipelago.⁴⁷

The political and religious situation in the Bantenese Sultanate was clearly favorable for Al-Makassari to remain there. His marriage to the daughter of the Sultan created a stronger bond with the Sultanate. He rose to one of the highest positions among the court elite, and he became the most influential member of the Sultan's Advisory Board. He was called opperpriester or hoogenpriester (high priest) by Dutch sources, and he played an important role not only in religious matters, but also in political ones.⁴⁸

The news about Al-Makassari's presence in Banten soon reached South Sulawesi. The Sultan of Gowa dispatched a delegation to Banten to induce him to return to his homeland. The Sultan requested that Al-Makassari teach the royal family about Islam and, thus, accelerate the process of Islamization in the region. Al-Makassari, however, declined the invitation. Our sources⁴⁹ cite him as stating that he would not return to Gowa until his erudition in the teachings of the Islamic sciences reached perfection. He instead sent home his student 'Abd al-Bashir al-Darir, who had apparently followed him from Mecca to Banten. Al-Makassari appointed al-Darir, "the blind", his khalifah of the Khalwatiyyah and Naqshbandiyyah orders.

Thus, while in Banten, although Al-Makassari was increasingly pulled into the political arena, he continued to teach students in the capital city of Banten as well as to write. Later, when Al-Makassari was involved in wars against the Dutch, he was reported to have retreated to the village of Karang and had some connections with a man named by Dutch sources as Hadjee Karang.⁵⁰ Karang was the home of ‘Abd al-Muhyi, a disciple of al-Sinkili, and he was certainly the Hadjee Karang. ‘Abd al-Muhyi took the opportunity of his meeting with Al-Makassari to study with him, asking his commentary on certain verses of the Qur’an which dealt with mystical doctrines. ‘Abd al-Muhyi also asked Al-Makassari to transmit to him the silsilah of the tariqahs he received in the Haramayn.⁵¹

Included among the most prominent students of Al-Makassari was the heir to the Sultanate, ‘Abd al-Qahhar. There is little doubt that Al-Makassari recommended that he travel to Istanbul after performing his pilgrimage in Mecca. Al-Makassari’s wide contacts in the Arabian Peninsula and beyond and his possible visit to Istanbul helped pave the way for the Crown Prince to carry out his diplomatic mission. We have no further information on the mission. What is clear is that when the heir Prince returned from the Arabian Peninsula and surrounding areas to Banten with the new title of Sultan Haji, he soon appealed to the Bantenese to wear clothes of Arab style.⁵²

‘Abd al-Qahhar’s insistence on Arab dress is reported by Sasmita⁵³ to have been the initial reason for the rifts between him and his father, Sultan Ageng. But it appears that the most fundamental cause of conflict was the decision of Sultan Ageng to appoint his other son, Pangeran Purbaya, to succeed him to the throne, while ‘Abd al-Qahhar was on his pilgrimage.⁵⁴ This decision was apparently prompted by ‘Abd al-Qahhar’s predilection for the Dutch in contrast to Sultan Ageng’s decidedly anti-Netherland’s disposition. Sultan Ageng attempted to reach some reconciliation with ‘Abd al-Qahhar: the latter was restored to his original position as heir, and he was assigned to rule the Sultanate from the capital city, Banten, while the old Sultan moved to Tirtayasa. These policies proved to be a great blow for the old Sultan, for ‘Abd al-Qahhar now used his position to embrace the Dutch even more closely.

Meanwhile, Sultan Ageng had reasserted his rule over the Cirebon Sultanate and warned the Dutch resident in Batavia in the presence of the English, French, and Danish residents that he would consider every act of hostility or interference by the Dutch East Indies Company (DEIC but popularly: VOC) in the affairs of Cirebon as a casus belli for him.⁵⁵ ‘Abd al-Qahhar did not share his father’s views. He made it clear that he took the side of the Dutch. Probably with the connivance of the Dutch, ‘Abd al-Qahhar declared the abdication of his father from the throne in 1091/1680, and he claimed it for himself. Sultan Haji soon dismissed supporters of Sultan Ageng from their official positions and sent envoys to Batavia to negotiate a peace treaty with the Dutch.

Sultan Ageng refused his forced abdication; he gathered his army in Tirtayasa, and civil war appeared inevitable. Being caught in this difficult situation, Al-Makassari, together with Pangeran Purbaya, chose to take the side of Sultan Ageng. The war finally broke out in the last days of 1092/early 1682, when Sultan Ageng’s forces besieged Sultan Haji in the capital, Banten. Realizing that his position was precarious, Sultan Haji appealed for support from Batavia. In return for Dutch help in keeping him on the throne, he promised to cede all trade benefits to the VOC.

The Dutch immediately seized this long-awaited opportunity. Reinforcements under Captain Francois Tack were sent from Batavia so that Sultan Haji could escape from being humiliated by Sultan's Ageng army. Fresh from victories in South Sulawesi, Cirebon and Mataram, the Dutch army was able to inflict reverses on Sultan Ageng's forces. On 29 December 1682, Dutch troops attacked Tirtayasa, but Sultan Ageng, Al-Makassari and Pangeran Purbaya escaped the siege and took refuge in the southern mountains of West Java. Persistently pursued by forces of the Dutch and Sultan Haji, Sultan Ageng was finally captured in 1096/1683 and was exiled to Batavia, where he died in 1103/1692.⁵⁶

Sultan Ageng's capture, however, did not put an end to the war. His force now led by Al-Makassari. Conducting a guerilla warfare, Al-Makassari's forces of 4,000 men, consisting of the Bantenese, Makassarese/Buginese, and Javanese, proved difficult to subdue. This attests to Al-Makassari's dauntless courage and bravery, and to his firm determination to fight the enemy. After the failure of their attempts to capture Al-Makassari on the battlefield, the Dutch finally employed the familiar trickery which they so frequently used in their territorial expansion in the Archipelago.

According to one version from Dutch accounts, Van Happel, the commander of the Dutch troops, wearing Arab garb, disguised as a Muslim, was able to infiltrate Al-Makassari's fortification. He finally captured him on December 14, 1683.⁵⁷ Another version of the capture was that Van Happel came to Al-Makassari hiding place with the latter's daughter, promising him the pardon of the Dutch if he surrendered. Persuaded by the promise, which was never honored by the Dutch, Al-Makassari and his forces joined Van Happel and followed him to Cirebon, where he was officially declared a prisoner of war and was taken to Batavia. At the same time, his followers of South Sulawesi origin were sent back to their homeland.⁵⁸

3.2 Banished from Batavia to Ceylon and the Cape of Good Hope

With the capture of Al-Makassari, the Banten wars practically ended. The news about Al-Makassari's detention spread all over Batavia and beyond; he was hailed as a great hero in the struggle against the Dutch expansionism. He was highly venerated: even his sepah (chewed betelnut) was picked up by his followers when he spat it out and was preserved as a relic.⁵⁹ It is not hard to understand, then, that the Dutch feared that the Muslims would rise up to free him. In September 1684, they exiled him to Ceylon together with two wives, several children, 12 disciples and several maids.⁶⁰

Despite the fact that Al-Makassari stayed in Ceylon for almost a decade, studies on the Malay-Indonesian Muslim community on that island fail to disclose his presence and role in the development of Islam there.⁶¹ This is unfortunate, since when he was there, Al-Makassari produced a substantial number of works, some of which bear the title of Saylaniyyah (or Sailan [Ceylon]) or are mentioned explicitly to have been written in Sarandib (medieval Arabic term for Ceylon).⁶² Furthermore, Al-Makassari appears to have left some descendants in Ceylon who possess manuscripts that could be a starting point for further research.⁶³ Such manuscripts would certainly be useful for complementing both Indonesian accounts and Dutch records of Al-Makassari's life in Ceylon.

It is worth noting that outside the Archipelago, Ceylon, ruled by the Dutch in the period between 1050/1640 and 1211/1796, was the second center for banishment after the Cape of Good Hope for Malay-Indonesian exiles. Due to its proximity to the Archipelago, Ceylon had been preferred by the Dutch to the Cape of Good Hope, which seemed to be reserved for more dangerous exiles. The Dutch apparently began to transport a substantial number of Malay-Indonesian exiles to Ceylon as soon as they established their rule there.⁶⁴ We know very little about the life of exiles prior to the seventeenth century, but there is no doubt that Al-Makassari was the most prominent Malay-Indonesian figure ever banished by the Dutch to Ceylon.

In a certain sense, Al-Makassari's banishment to Ceylon was a blessing in disguise. While he was in Banten, he experienced political turbulence, but he never abandoned his scholarly concerns; he was even able during this period to produce several works. Now in Ceylon, he had the opportunity to return entirely to the scholarly world. In the introduction to his work, Safinat al-Najah, Al-Makassari in retrospect expected that by the grace of God he would inherit the wisdom of Adam, the prophet, who was, in the Muslim belief, discharged on Ceylon after his fall from Heaven.⁶⁵ So, Al-Makassari devoted himself primarily to writing.

We can fairly assume that Al-Makassari played an important role in nurturing the hitherto small and inchoate Malay Muslim community on the island. Al-Makassari himself expressly mentioned that he wrote his works in Ceylon to satisfy the requests of his friends, disciples, and his fellow Muslims there.⁶⁶ He also established contact with other scholars whilst there. Among Muslims scholars of South Asian origin who became his friends were Sidi Matilaya, Abu al-Ma'ani Ibrahim Minhan, and 'Abd al-Shiddiq b. Muhammad Shadiq.

The fact that his work Safinat al-Najah was written upon the request of Ibrahim Minhan was an indication that Minhan and his fellow South Asian scholars were aware of Al-Makassari's erudition. It is possible that through these scholars, the Moghul ruler, Aurangzeb (1071-1119/1659-1707), learned about the banishment of Al-Makassari to Ceylon. The Sultan reportedly warned the Ceylon-based Dutch authorities to pay attention to the well-being of Al-Makassari.⁶⁷

Thus, the banishment had failed to cut Al-Makassari off from outside contacts. No less important than Al-Makassari's relations with the South Asian scholars were his contacts with Malay-Indonesian pilgrims who made Ceylon their transit point on their way going to and returning from Mecca and Medina, or with Muslim traders who came there for business. The fact that the contacts between Al-Makassari and the pilgrims existed becomes obvious when he says explicitly in one of his works that he wrote it for his friends, the hajjis.⁶⁸

It was these hajjis who brought Al-Makassari's works, written in Ceylon, to the Archipelago so that we can read them today. They, in turn, brought works written by Malay-Indonesian scholars to Ceylon. The religious works found among the Malays on this island include works of al-Raniri, al-Sinkili, and Al-Makassari himself.⁶⁹

Considering the existence of such extensive relations, the Dutch were right in assuming that Al-Makassari still exerted a considerable influence upon the Malay-Indonesian Muslims. They were suspicious that through those pilgrims Al-Makassari had established networks, consisting of various Muslim rulers in the Archipelago, who would wage concerted and large-scale wars against the Dutch. Fearing further political and religious repercussions from Al-Makassari's relations with his countrymen, the Dutch authorities decided in 1106/1693 to exile Al-Makassari even farther away, to Cape of Good Hope located at the southern tip of Africa. He was already 68 years old when, once again, he was forced to get on board "De Voetboog" that shipped him and his entourage to the Cape.⁷⁰

3.3 Cape of Good Hope: The Place of Banishment

For those from the Archipelago, the Cape of Good Hope was the most notorious place of banishment. Since it was colonized by the Dutch in 1064/1652, several eminent Malay-Indonesian figures, considered by the Dutch to be the most dangerous, had been exiled there. But, as in Ceylon, not all Malay-Indonesians brought to the Cape of Good Hope were exiles; some of them were slaves who were used to work on Dutch farms in the region.⁷¹ Prior to the coming of Al-Makassari, both the early exiles and slaves constituted the nucleus of a small Muslim group that came to be known as the 'Cape Malays'.

Though all writers on South Africa's Muslim community are in accord that Al-Makassari was the most important Malay-Indonesian exile who was ever banished to Cape of Good Hope, there were others such as Tuan Guru too.⁷² Al-Makassari arrived in the Cape of the Good Hope on 2 April 1694. Most of his retinue of 49 people were those who had followed him earlier to Ceylon. Two months later the Dutch authorities took him and his retinue to live in Zandvliet, a farm village at the mouth of the Eerste River, so that he, as Jeffreys points out, "would not be in touch with any adherents of the old regime."⁷³ Bearing historical connections to Al-Makassari and his followers, this locality today is known as Macassar and its coastal area is called Macassar beach.

Generally, Al-Makassari received good treatment and due respect from the Dutch authorities in the Cape. Governor Simon van der Stel, and later his son, Willem Adriaan, befriended him.⁷⁴ Despite this, they must have been aware that Al-Makassari could give them problems. Therefore, the Dutch attempted to isolate him and his followers from other Malay-Indonesian exiles who had arrived before them. But their attempts apparently failed. He once again became the rallying point for the Malay-Indonesians, not to revolt against the Dutch but to intensify their beliefs and practices in Islam. Al-Makassari and his 12 disciples, now called imams, together with other exiles, carried out teaching sessions and religious services secretly in their lodges.⁷⁵ With such activities, Al-Makassari was not only able to preserve the faith of his fellow exiles in Islam, but also to gain numerous new converts.⁷⁶

Al-Makassari appears to have devoted most of his time to proselytizing activities; there is no evidence that he also spent his time on writing, for none among his known works contains any indication whatsoever that it was written in South Africa. This suggests that Al-

Makassari considered direct propagation of Islam through teaching to be of the utmost importance for his Malay-Indonesian community.

This is no surprise, since the Dutch not only prohibited Muslims from openly holding religious services, but worse still, ordered the Christianization of all Muslim slaves in the Cape.⁷⁷ The Dutch evangelist scholar, Zwemer, even regrets the failure of Petrus Kalden, first minister of the Old Dutch Church at Cape Town, to convert Al-Makassari to Christianity, even though the latter lived on land that belonged to the minister. Zwemer bluntly points out that a great opportunity was lost by Kalden.⁷⁸

Al-Makassari has been hailed by historians of South African Islam as the founder of Islam in the region. The term “founder” could be misleading, for Islam, or at Malay-Indonesian Muslim community, had clearly existed in the Cape before he arrived there. Therefore, I would suggest that he is more appropriately called the “reviver” or “revitalizer” of Islam at the Cape in particular, and in South Africa in general. His determination to preserve the belief of his fellow Muslims was one of the most crucial factors that contributed to the survival and further development of Islam in the region.

Furthermore, as Zwemer⁷⁹ points out, there were three Sufi orders which existed among Muslims in South Africa: the Qadiriyyah, Shattariyyah, and Rifa’iyyah. It is highly likely that Al-Makassari was responsible for introducing these orders there, for he was a khalifah of all of them. As early as 1186/1772, Thurnberg⁸⁰ observed a ritual among the Malays which clearly constituted dhikr, and in the 1860s, Mayson⁸¹ gives us vivid accounts of the well-known practices among the Rifa’iyyah followers of being invulnerable to fire and weapons.

Al-Makassari, as Colvin⁸² in his Romance of the Empire asserts, could not but have longed for the palms and spices of his native land, which he was doomed never again to see. Colvin may be right, but Al-Makassari himself never made clear his feeling of being an old exile under his long-contested enemy. Yet his relatives in Gowa had never lost their hope for his freedom. As early as 1103/1689, when Al-Makassari was still in Ceylon, the Sultan of Gowa, ‘Abd al-Jalil (r. 1088-1121/1677-1709) and all the important local notables, came to meet the Dutch Governor in Makassar, asking for the return of Al-Makassari to his homeland. They brought with them 2,000 rijksdaalders, which had been donated by both notables and commoners alike to make it possible for his return. Although the Governor agreed to meet the request, Batavia annulled his decision.⁸³ ‘Abd al-Jalil asked the Dutch to return Al-Makassari repeatedly, until 1110/1698 when the Dutch Council in Batavia issued a definite refusal to consider any such request, obviously fearing political repercussions from his return.⁸⁴

Al-Makassari died at the Cape on 22 Dhu al-Qa’dah 1111/ 22 May 1699,⁸⁵ and was buried in Faure, on the sandhills of False Bay, not far from the farm of Zandvliet. His tomb later came to be known as the Karamat (lit. “miracle”) Shaykh Yusuf. Between 1321/1903 and 1333/1913, the grave of Al-Makassari was restored by Haji Sulayman Shah Muhammad, a rich South Asian philanthropist who settled in the Cape. A splendid domed mausoleum was erected over Al-Makassari’s grave, which later was complemented by other buildings, including tombs of four of his disciples. The karamat of Al-Makassari is one of the most beautiful and the most important tomb buildings in the Cape Peninsula. It became a central point of the Malay-Indonesian community, and the most important place of Muslim religious visitation (ziyarah) at the Cape; or as du Plessis puts it, “the tomb has become the Mecca of the South, where thousands of pilgrims pay their respects annually to the memory of a noble exile.”⁸⁶

3.4 Al-Makassari’s Death

The death of Al-Makassari was a relief for the Cape Dutch authorities, both politically and financially. On 1 July 1699, they reported his death to Batavia; they asked Batavia to lift the financial burden incurred by the Cape authorities for the keep of Al-Makassari and his retinue. As a result, the Council of Batavia decided in October 1699, to grant permission to Al-Makassari’s survivors and followers to return to the Archipelago, should they want to; most of them chose to return, and they departed on the board “De Liefde” and “De Spiegel” in 1116/1704.⁸⁷

In the meantime, the news of Al-Makassari’s death also reached South Sulawesi. Once again, the Sultan of Gowa requested the immediate return of Al-Makassari’s remains. Finally, the remains - allegedly belonging to Al-Makassari - arrived in Gowa on 5 April 1705 and were reburied the following day in Lakiung.⁸⁸ Like his tomb in Faure, this tomb of Al-Makassari soon became one of the most important places of religious visitation in South Sulawesi.⁸⁹

The fact that Al-Makassari has two tombs has led to some speculations. De Haan believes that the Dutch sent the actual remains of Al-Makassari to Gowa; therefore, his tomb in Faure is empty.⁹⁰ On the other hand, the Muslims in the Cape believe that only the remains of a single finger of Al-Makassari were taken to his homeland.⁹¹ This speculation appears to contain some truth if one considers a legend in Gowa about the body of Al-Makassari that they reburied. According to the legend, initially only a handful of dust, which was probably the remains of his finger, was brought from the Cape. The dust, however, kept increasing until it took the shape of the full body of Al-Makassari when it reached Gowa.⁹²

4. Al-Makassari’s Neo-Sufism

Al-Makassari was primarily a Sufi. His life experience makes it clear that his Sufism did not keep him away from worldly affairs. Unlike earlier Sufis who exhibited strong tendencies to shun worldly life, the whole expression of Al-Makassari’s teachings and practices shows a full range of activism. Like al-Raniri and al-Sinkili in the Sultanate of Aceh, Al-Makassari played an important role in Bantenese politics. Not only that, but he stepped up to the forefront of the wars against the Dutch after the capture of Sultan Ageng Tirtayasa. However, like most scholars in the international networks of scholars in the seventeenth century, Al-Makassari did not employ the tariqah organization to mobilize the masses, especially for the purpose of war.

Al-Makassari wrote his works in perfect Arabic; his long sojourn in the Arabian Peninsula had enabled him to write in that language. Almost all his known works deal with tasawwuf, particularly in its relations with kalam. Like al-Raniri and al-Sinkili, Al-Makassari in developing his teachings also frequently cites such scholars and sufis as al-Ghazali, Junayd al-Baghdadi, Ibn ‘Arabi, al-Jili, Ibn ‘Ata’ Allah, and other authorities.

4.1 Tawhid: A Central Concept in Tasawwuf

A central concept of Al-Makassari’s tasawwuf is the purification of belief (‘aqidah) in the Unity of God (tawhid). This is his attempt to explain the transcendence of God over his creation. Such, of course, is a central theme developed by other scholars in the networks. Citing Surat al-Ikhlās (Qur’an Chapter 112) and another verse of the Qur’an which states that nothing can be compared with Him (42:11), Al-Makassari maintained that the Unity of God (tawhid) was infinite and absolute.⁹³ Tawhid is the essential component in Islam; one who does not believe in tawhid is an unbeliever (kafir). He further compared the immaculate tawhid with a leafy tree: gnostic knowledge (ma’rifah) is its branches and leaves, and devotional services (‘ibadat) are its fruits. One who has no ma’rifah is ignorant (jahil), and one who does not practice ‘ibadat is sinful (fasiq).⁹⁴

Despite Al-Makassari’s insistence on God’s transcendence, he believed that God is all-encompassing (al-ihathah) and omnipresent (al-ma’iyyah) over His creation.⁹⁵ But he took great care not to associate himself with the doctrine of pantheism by maintaining that although God is present or expresses Himself in His creation, it does not necessarily mean that the creation is God himself; all creation is simply allegorical being (al-mawjud al-majazi) not the Real Being (al-mawjud al-haqiqi).⁹⁶ Thus, like al-Sinkili, he believed that the creation is only a shadow of God, not God Himself. According to Al-Makassari, the “expression” of God in his creations is not the “physical” presence of God in them.

With the concept of al-ihathah and al-ma’iyyah, God descends (tanazzul) while a human being ascends (taraqqi), a spiritual process which brings the two closer. It is important to note that, according to Al-Makassari, the process will not take its form in the ultimate unity between a human being and God: while the two may be coming closely associated, in the final analysis, a human is human, and God is God. With this, Al-Makassari rejects the concept of wahdat al-wujud (“Unity of Being” or ontological monism) and al-hulul (“Divine Incarnation”). In his opinion, God is simply incomparable to anything (laysa ka mithlihi shay”— Qur’an 42:11). Instead, he adopts the concept of wahdat al-shuhud (“Unity of Consciousness” or phenomenological monism).⁹⁷ Thus, while he carefully disengages himself from the controversial doctrine of wahdat al-wujud of Ibn ‘Arabi and of al-hulul of Manshur al-Hallaj, Al-Makassari adopted the doctrine of wahdat al-shuhud, developed mainly by Ahmad al-Sirhindi (971-1034/1564-1624) later, this doctrine was also adopted by Shah Wali Allah (1114-76/1702-1762).

A salient feature of Al-Makassari’s theology of God’s Unity is that he attempts to reconcile all Attributes or Qualities of God. According to Muslim belief, God possesses attributes which may seem to be conflicting one with another. God is, for instance, believed to be the First (al-Awwal) and the Last (al-Akhir); the Exterior (al-Zahir) and the Interior (al-Batin); the One who gives guidance (al-Hadi), but also the One who allows humans to astray (al-Mudill). According to Al-Makassari, all these seemingly conflicting attributes of God should be understood in accordance with the Unity of God Himself. Emphasizing only certain attributes while ignoring the others will lead to wrong belief and practices. The Realities of God are the Unity of pairs of conflicting attributes, and none will be able to comprehend their secret, but those who have been granted knowledge by God Himself.⁹⁸

4.2 ‘Ash’ari Doctrine in Al-Makassari’s Theology

As far as Al-Makassari’s theology is concerned, he adhered strictly to the Ash’ari doctrines. He thus stressed the total commitment to all six articles of belief, that is, belief in the One God, the Angels, the Revelation, the Prophets, the Day of Judgment, and the Will of God. Furthermore, in connection with impeccable belief in these articles of faith, he appealed to his fellow Muslims to accept the ambiguous meanings of some verses of the Qur’an, or al-ayat al-mutashabihat.⁹⁹ Looking for or questioning the real meanings of such verses is simply an indication of not totally believing in God; only with the acceptance of the verses as such will a traveler on God’s path be able to gain the blessing of God.¹⁰⁰

It is well-known that the theology of al-Ash’ari emphasizes human predestination vis-a-vis the Will of God. Al-Makassari basically accepts this notion. For instance, he repeatedly asked Muslims to sincerely embrace their fate and the divine decree (al-Qada wa al-Qadar), either good or bad.¹⁰¹ He, however, insists that human beings must not simply surrender to them. Of particular importance, they cannot blame God for their bad deeds, for they should not simply accept them as their fate. Instead, they must make ceaseless attempts to avoid sinful behavior and improve humanity by thinking about the creation and doing good deeds.

In this way, Al-Makassari believed, human beings will be able to create a better life in this world and the next. More importantly, they will open the way to attain the highest stage, called al-‘ubudiyah al-muthlaqah (“unrestricted adoration”). The one, who succeeds in achieving this stage, reaches the center of his/her being and is, accordingly, called the Universal Human Being (al-Insan al-Kamil).¹⁰² According to Al-Makassari, by achieving the stage of the Universal Human Being a slave strips his/her allegorical being (al-mawj’ d al-majazi) and gets into his/her real “nothingness,” non-existence (‘udum al-haqiqi). His/Her nothingness is taken by God as a mirror (mir’ah) of Himself. God further reveals (tajalli) Himself in the slave. In other words, the slave who is absorbed (fana’) in the existence of God can recognize the secrets of his/her Master, that is, God. He then sees through His Sight, hears with His Hearing, reaches with His Hands, walks with His Feet, speaks with His Word, and thinks with His Mind.¹⁰³

Al-Makassari’s notion of the Universal Human Being reminds us of the similar doctrine elaborated by al-Jili. The latter says:

If the servant is lifted higher and God fortifies him/her and conforms him/her, after his/her extinction (fana’), in the state of subsistence (baqa’), God will reply Himself to whoever invokes this servant.

When God reveals Himself to His servant in one of his/her Qualities, the servant soars in the sphere of this Quality until he/she has reached the limit by way of integration (al-ijmal), not by distinctive knowledge, for those who realise the Divine Qualities do not have distinctive knowledge except by virtue of integration. If the servant soars in the sphere of a Quality, and he/she realises it entirely by (spiritual) integration, he/she is seated on the throne of this Quality, so that he/she assimilates it into him/herself and becomes its subject; from then on, he/she encounters another Quality, and so on until he realises all the Divine Qualities.

To some, God reveals Himself in the Quality of the Sight (al-bashar). For, revealing Himself first by the total intellectual vision which penetrates everything, God will reveal Himself more particularly in the Quality of Sight, so that the sight of the servant will become the organ of his/her knowledge¹⁰⁴

Again, Al-Makassari took pains not to be trapped in the long and heated controversy concerning the concept of Unity of Being between the servant and God. He maintained that even though the servant can enter the existence of God, he/she nevertheless remains a human being, whereas God remains God.

Like most other Sufis, Al-Makassari clearly held a positive view of humankind. In his opinion, every person has an innate disposition to believe in God, and those who are closest to Him are the ones who are able to nurture that disposition in the right way.¹⁰⁵ Therefore, he appealed to his fellow believers not to scold or look down on those who do not believe in God and who live a sinful life; the faithful simply must have a good opinion (husn al-zann) of the unbelievers. Citing Abu Madyan al-Tilimsani, he reminds them that the flaws of the unbelievers may be better than the pitfalls of the faithful.¹⁰⁶ With such a view, it is not surprising that nowhere in his works does Al-Makassari accuse the Dutch who inflicted a great misery upon his life.

4.3 Al-Makassari's Classification of Believers

In accordance with their degree of belief in God, Al-Makassari classified the believers into four categories. The first, those who simply utter the statement of faith (shahadah) without really believing, are called the hypocrites (al-munafiq). The second group is the people who do not only utter the shahadah but also implant it deep into their souls; this group is called the common faithful (al-mu'min al-'awwam). The third category is the group of faithful who fully realize the inward and outward implication of their statement of faith in their life. They are called the people of the elite (ahl al-khawwas). The last group is the highest category of the faithful, who come out of the third group by intensifying their shahadah, mainly by practicing tasawwuf, to get closer to God. They are accordingly called the select of the elite (khashsh al-khawwas).¹⁰⁷

Al-Makassari clearly reserves the tasawwuf for the select of the elite. Like other scholars in the networks, his tasawwuf is the one which has been classified as neo-Sufism; he calls his tasawwuf by the name the “tariqat al-Muhammadiyah” or “tariqat al-Ahmadiyah” which is familiar among scholars in the networks. This very name implicitly conveys their aim to return to the way of the Prophet Muhammad. Al-Makassari believed the “tariqat al-

Muhammadiyah” constitutes the right path (Sirat al-Mustaqim).¹⁰⁸ Throughout his writings, he made it clear that the mystical way can only be trod through a total commitment both outwardly and inwardly to the legal doctrine of Islam as well as to the way of the Prophet. He maintained that committing oneself simply to the shari’ah is better than practicing tasawwuf while ignoring Muslim legal precepts.¹⁰⁹ He even went so far as to classify as zindiq (freethinker) and mulhid (heretic) those who believe that they will be able to get closer to God without practicing such rituals as prayer and fasting.¹¹⁰

It appears that Al-Makassari was rather over-zealous in the reconciliation between the exoteric and esoteric aspects of Islam. In this regard, he repeatedly narrated statements of unnamed authorities who assert that those who stick only to the shari’ah without the haqiqah are fasiq (sinful), and those who practice tasawwuf while ignoring shari’ah are zindiq.¹¹¹ The best that can be done is to harmonize the two. As Al-Makassari put it: “Let it be known, my fellows, exoteric devotion without esoteric one is like a body without a soul (ruh), whereas esoteric occupation without exoteric devotion is like a soul without a body.”¹¹² Finally, he cited a hadith of the Prophet which states that the Prophet was sent by God to bring both the shari’ah and haqiqah.¹¹³

Al-Makassari insisted that every aspirant in the path of God should practice all the precepts of the shari’ah before he enters tasawwuf.¹¹⁴ He then listed the ways to get closer to God. First is the way of the akhyar (best people), that is by performing numerous prayers, reading the Qur’an and hadith, striving in the way of God (al-jihad fi sabil Allah) and other exoteric devotion. The second is the way of the people of mujahidat al-shaqa’ (those who strive against hardship) by way of rigorous training to get rid of bad habits and to purify the mind and soul. The last is the way of the people of dhikr (ahl al-dhikr) who love God both outwardly and inwardly; they take very special care of the two kinds of devotion.¹¹⁵

Al-Makassari, however, discouraged the traveler on God’s path (salik) from treading his/her own way in seeking after truth; it will only lead him/her to astray for Satan will become his master. Therefore, he/she should look for a trusted and experienced Sufi master, even if he/she, must travel to distant places, leaving his/her family and homeland behind. But there is no other way; only with the guidance of a trusted Sufi master (shaykh) will he/she be able to get to God; for the master will show him/her the correct and surest way to achieve spiritual progress.¹¹⁶ More than that, Sufi shaykhs are successors of the Prophet; they are his representatives (khalifah) both outwardly and inwardly.¹¹⁷

With such an important position reserved by Al-Makassari for the Sufi Shaykh, he differentiated himself from most scholars in the networks. Unlike Ahmad al-Qushashi who encouraged a salik to leave his master if the latter disobeyed the shari’ah, Al-Makassari adhered to the earlier notion of the position of the Sufi master vis-a-vis his disciples. Thus, for Al-Makassari, once a salik pledges his/her allegiance (bay’ah) to a certain Sufi master, he/she must totally obey the master; this takes place even if the shaykh does something which does not necessarily lead to a closer communion with God.

In accordance with the traditional way, he/she should behave like a dead body in the hands of those who clean it. To support this view, Al-Makassari cited Ibn ‘Arabi, who maintained that a salik must obey his/her master, even though he/she may observe that the shaykh does something that runs contrary to the precepts of the shari'ah. The reason for this is that the shaykh is not infallible: even some prophets made mistakes.¹¹⁸ However, when the shaykh makes mistakes by transgressing certain rules of the shari'ah, Al-Makassari reminded the disciple to keep up the master's good deeds in mind and not follow the master's transgression.¹¹⁹

4.4 Dhikr's Essence and Its Centrality in Khalwatiyyah Yusuf

Al-Makassari discussed at length some specific religious devotional services and the steps toward spiritual progress which should be undertaken by the travelers in God's path. He put a special emphasis on dhikr. His dhikr was mainly the vocal one (jahr), as taught by both Ibrahim al-Kurani and Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Baqi al-Naqshbandi.¹²⁰ In accordance with his concept of the purification of faith, in Al-Makassari's opinion, the essence of the dhikr is the full recognition of the Unity of God. On the preliminary level (al-mubtadi'), the one who performs dhikr confirms that in his/her faith nothing should be worshipped but God. On the intermediate level (al-mutawassit), he/she recognizes that he/she seeks and loves nothing but God. On the final level (al-muntahi), he/she fully believes that there is no other being but God.¹²¹

Although Al-Makassari's teachings are apparently confined to the tasawwuf, this does not conceal his main concern; that is, the renewal of Muslim belief and practice in the Archipelago by way of the implementation of a more shari'ah-oriented Sufism. Of the various tariqahs Al-Makassari affiliated with, it was the Khalwatiyyah - later known as the Khalwatiyyah Yusuf - which found fertile ground, especially in the South Sulawesi region. If the people of South Sulawesi, and of West Java, have been known generally among the most fervent Muslims in the Archipelago, one can hardly underestimate the role of Al-Makassari in developing that identity.

5. Bibliography

5.1 Books, Chapters, Articles, and Theses

- Abdullah, Hawash. 1980. Perkembangan Ilmu Tasawwuf dan Tokoh-tokohnya di Nusantara. Surabaya: Al-Ikhlâs.
- Abu Bakar, Abdul Latiff. (Ed.). 1990. Melayu Sri Lanka. Kuala Lumpur: Gapena.
- Ahmad, Rashid. 1990. "Gapena Pelopori Usaha Menjalin Hubungan yang Terputus." In Melayu Sri lanka (Ed. Abdul Latiff Abu Bakar). Kuala Lumpur: Gapena.
- Ahtmat, T.J.P.1990. "Kedatangan Orang Melayu ke Sri Lanka." In Melayu Sri lanka (Ed. Abdul Latiff Abu Bakar). Kuala Lumpur: Gapena, pp.13-15.
- al-Baghdadi, Isma'il Basha. 1951. Hadiyyat al-'Arifin: Asma' al-Mu'aliî fi 'Athar al-Musannifin. Istanbul: Milli Egitim Basimevi. 2 vols.

- al-Hawawi, Mustafa Fath Allah (d.1711). 1093. Fawa'id al-Irtihal wa Nata'ij al-Safar fi Akhbar Ahl al-Qarn al-hadi 'ashar. Cairo: MS Dar al-Kutub al-Mishriyyah. 3 vols.
- al-Jili, 'Abd al-Karim. 1983. Universal Man (extracts trans. with commentary by Titus Burckhardt and English translation by Angela Culme-Seymour). Paris: Beshara Publication.
- al-Kattani, 'Abd al-Hayy b. 'Abd al-Kabir. 1402/1982. Fahras al-Faharis wa al-Athbat wa Mu' jam al-Ma'ajim wa al-Mashyakhat wa al-Musalsalat. Beirut: Dar al-Harb al-Islami. 3 vols.
- al-Kurani, Ibrahim. 1328/1910. al-Umam li 'Ijaz al-Himam. Hyderabad: Da'irat al-Ma'irif al-Nizamiyyah.
- al-Muhibbi, Muhammad Amin (1061-1111/1651-99). 1248/1867-8. Khulasat al-Athar fi A'yan al-Qarn al-hadi 'ashar. Cairo. Repr. Beirut: Dar Hadir. 4 vols.
- Andaya, Leonard Y. 1981. The Heritage of Arung Palakka: A History of South Sulawesi (Celebes) in the Seventeenth Century. The Hague: Nijhoff.
- Anonymous. 1986. "A Brief Historical Note on the Malay Migration to Sri Lanka." In Jebat. 14: 65-92.
- Anonymous. 1982. Bugis-Makassar dalam Peta Islamisasi Indonesia. Ujung Pandang: IAIN Alauddin.
- Azyumardi, Azra. 2015. "The Significance of Southeast Asia (the Jawah World) for Islamic Studies: Historical and Comparative Perspectives." In Kyoto Bulletin of Islamic Area Studies. 8: 69-87.
- Basang, Djirong (trans.). 1981. Riwayat Syekh Yusuf dan Kisah Makkutaknang Daeng Mannuntungi. Jakarta: Departemen Pendidikan dan Budaya.
- Bradlow, Frank R. 1981. "Islam at the Cape of Good Hope." In Suid-Afrikaanse Historiese Joernaal. 13: 12-19.
- Bradlow, F.R. 1978. "The Origins of the Early Cape Muslims." In The Early Cape Muslims: A Study of Their Mosques, Genealogy and Origins (Authors: F.R. Bradlow & Margaret Cairns). Cape Town: A.A. Balkema, pp.81-90.
- Brockelmann, Carl. 1937-1949. Geschichte der arabischen Litteratur (GAL). Leiden: E.J. Brill.
- Cense, Anton Abraham. 1966. "Old Buginese and Macassar Diaries." In Bijdragen tot de Taal-, Land- en Volkenkunde (BKJ). 122: 416-428.
- Cense, Anton A. 1950. "De verering van Sjaich Jusuf in Zuid Celebes." In Bingkisan Budi. Leiden: Sijhoff.
- Cuoq, Joseph M. 1975. Les Musulmans en Afrique. Paris: Maisonneuve & Larose.
- Dangor, Suleman Essop. 1982. Shaykh Yusuf. Durban: Kat Bros.

- Davids, Achmat. 1981. "Politics and the Muslims of Cape Town: A Historical Survey." In Studies in the History of Cape Town. 4: 174-220.
- de Haan, Frederik. 1912. Priangan: De Preanger-regentschappen onder het Nederlandsch bestuur tot 1811. Batavia & 's-Gravenhage, Kolf & Nijhoff, III.
- Drewes, Gerardus W.J. 1926. "Sjeh Joesoep Makasar." In Djawa. 6: 84-85.
- du Plessis, Izak D. 1972. The Cape Malays: History, Religion, Traditions, Folk Tales of the Malay Quarter. Cape Town: A.A. Balkema.
- du Plessis, I.D. 1970. Sjeg Joesoef. Kaapstad: Nasionale Bookhandel.
- du Plessis, I.D. 1946. The Cape Malays. Johannesburg: South African Institute of Race Relations.
- du Plessis, Izak D. & C.A. Luckhoff. 1953. The Malay Quarter and Its People. Cape Town: A.A. Balkema.
- Feener, Michael R. 1999. "Syaikh Yusuf and the Appreciation of Muslim Saints in Modern Indonesia." In Journal for Islamic Studies. 18/19: 112-131.
- Greyling, C. 1980. "Schech Yusuf, the Founder of Islam in South Africa." In Religion in Southern Africa. 1(1): 10-11.
- Hamka. 1963. "Sjeich Jusuf Tadju'l Chalwati (Tuanta Salamaka), 1626-1699." In Perbendaharaan Lama. Medan: Madju.
- Heer, Nicolas. 1980. The Precious Pearl: Al-Jami's al-Durrah al-Fakhirah together with his Glosses and the Commentary of 'Abd al-Ghafur al-Lari. Albany: State University of New York.
- Hussainmiya, B.A. 1990. Orang Rejimen: The Malays of the Ceylon Rifle Regiment. Bangi: Universiti Kebangsaan Malaysia.
- Jeffreys, Kathleen Marie. 1939. "Sheikh Joseph at the Cape." In Cape Naturalist. 6: 195.
- Jeffreys, K.M. 1938. "The Karamat at Zandvlei, Faure. Sheikh Joseph in the East." In The Cape Naturalist. 5:15-17.
- Lightvoet, Alfred. 1880. "Transcriptie van het Dagboek der Vorsten van Gowa en Tello." In BKI. 28:1-259.
- Lubis, Nabilah 1996. Syekh Yusuf al-Taj al-Makasari: Menyingkap Intisari Segala Rahasia. Bandung: Mizan, EFEO & FS UI.
- Mach, R. 1977. Catalogue of Arabic Manuscripts (Yahuda Section) in the Garrett Collection Princeton University Library. Princeton: Princeton University Press.
- Massiara, H.A. 1983. Syekh Yusuf Tuanta Salamaka dari Gowa. Jakarta: Yayasan Lakipadada.
- Matthes, Benjamin F. 1885. "Boeagineese en Makassaarsche Legendes." In BKI, 34: 449-452.

- Mattulada, Hamid Andi. 1983. "Islam di Sulawesi Selatan." In Agama dan Perubahan Sosial (Ed. Taufik Abdullah). Jakarta: Rajawali, pp.209-321.
- Mayson, John S. 1861. The Malays of Cape Town. Manchester: J. Galt & Co.
- Noorduyn, Jacobus. 1965. "Origins of South Celebes Historical Writings." In An Introduction to Indonesian Historiography. Ithaca: Cornell University Press, pp.137-155.
- Noorduyn, Jacobus. 1956. "De Islamisering van Makassar." In BKI. 112: 247-266.
- Pelras, Christian. 1985. "Religion, Tradition and the Dynamics of Islamization in South Sulawesi." In Archipel, 29: 107-135.
- Said, Arifin. 1990. "Manuskrip Melayu di Sri Lanka." In Melayu Sri lanka. (Ed. Abdul Latiff Abu Bakar). Kuala Lumpur: Gapena. pp.73-76.
- Sasmita, Uka Tjandra.1967. Musuh Besar Kompeni Belanda: Sultan Ageng Tirtayasa. Jakarta: Nusalarang, pp.35-6.
- Scherzer, Karl Ritter von. 1861. Narrative of the Circumnavigation of the Globe by the Austrian Frigate Novara in the Years 1857, 1858 and 1859. London: Saunders, Otley and Company. I: 245-8.
- Schrieke, B.J.O. 1957. Indonesian Sociological Studies. The Hague & Bandung: Van Hoeve. 2 vols.
- Sham, Abu Hassan. 1990. "Malay Manuscripts and Sri Lanka." In Melayu Sri lanka (Ed. Abdul Latiff Abu Bakar). Kuala Lumpur: Gapena. pp.153-60.
- Stapel, Frederik W. 1939. Geschiedenis van Nederlandsch Indie. Amsterdam: Joost van den Vondel. 5 vols.
- Swart, Marius J. 1961. "The Karamat of Sheik Yussef." In South African Panorama 6(6): 18-19.
- Theal, G. McCall. 1909. History and Ethnography of Africa South of the Zambesi. London: Swan Sonnenschein. 3 vols.
- Thunberg, Carl P. 1795. Travels in Europe, Africa and Asia. London: F. and C. Rivingston. 4 vols.
- Tudjimah. C.S. 1987. Syeikh Yusuf (Syekh Jusuf Makasar) Makassar, Riwayat Hidup, Karya dan Ajarannya (Ed. Soegiarta Sriwibawa). Jakarta: Departemen Pendidikan dan Budaya and Jakarta: Penerbit Universitas Indonesia.
- Vlekke, B.H.M. 1959. Nusantara: A History of Indonesia. The Hague & Bandung: van Hoeve.
- Ricklefs, Merle C. 1990. A History of Modern Indonesia. London: Macmillan.
- Valentyn, Francois. 1724-1726. Oud en Nieuw Oost-Indien. Dordrecht/Amsterdam: Joannes van Braam. Volumes III-V.

- van Bruinessen, Martin. 1990. "The Origins and Development of the Naqshbandi Order in Indonesia." In Der Islam. 67: 150-179.
- van Selms, Adrianus. 1958. "Yussuf (Joseph), Sheik." In Dictionary of South African Biographies (Ed. W.J. de Kock). Cape Town & Pretoria: National Council for Research. 1: 893-894.
- Voll, John Obert. 1987. "Linking Groups in the Networks of Eighteenth-Century Revivalist Scholars: The Mizjaji Family in Yemen." In Eighteenth Century Renewal and Reform in Islam, (Eds. N. Levtzion & J.O. Voll). Syracuse: Syracuse University Press.
- Voorhoeve, Petrus. 1980. Handlist of Arabic Manuscripts in the Library of the University of Leiden and Other Collections in the Netherlands. Leiden: Leiden University Press.
- Walker, E.A. 1962. A History of Southern Africa. London: Longmans. 3rd ed.
- Yahya, A.S. 1990. "Budaya Bertulis Melayu Sri Lanka." In Melayu Sri lanka. (Ed. Abdul Latiff Abu Bakar). Kuala Lumpur: Gapena, pp.67-72.
- Zwemer, Samuel M. 1925. "Islam at Cape Town." In Moslem World. 15(4):327-333.

5.2 Manuscripts, Typescripts, and Other

- Amansyah, Ahmad M. 1975. "Tentang Lontara Syekh Yusuf Tajul Halawatiyah." Unpublished typescript, Ujung Pandang: Perpustakaan Universitas Hasanuddin.
- Anonymous, 1969. "Riwayat'na Tuanta Salamaka Rigowa." typescript, Makassar: pp. 19-20.
- Anonymous. "Hikajat Sjeich Joesoef van H.S.D. Moentoe Labbakang, Pangkadjene." Unpubl. typescript, Coll. A.A. Cense, Leiden University, KITLV Or. 545-218.
- Hamid, Abu. 1990. Syekh Yusuf Tajul Khalwati: Suatu Kajian Antropologi Agama. Unpublished doctoral diss, Ujung Pandang: Universitas Hasanuddin;
- Masuknya Islam di Sulawesi Selatan*. Ujung Pandang: Balai Penelitian Lektur, 1985-6.
- von Kleist, Ewald P.J. 1986. Ein indonesischer des 17 Jahrhunderts in Südafrika: Zwei Sendschreiben des Scheichs Yusuf Makassar. Unpublished MA thesis. Freiburg: Albert-Ludwigs-Universität.
- The following collection of Al-Makassari manuscripts are housed in the Jakarta National Library, MS Naskah Arab.
- Al-Makassari, Safinat al-Najah.
- Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah.
- Al-Makassari al-Barakat al-Saylaniyyah.
- Al-Makassari al-Manhat al-Saylaniyyah fi al-Manhat al-Rahmaniyyah.
- Al-Makassari Kayfiyat al-Munghi fi al-Ithbat bi al-Hadith al-Qudsi.

Al-Makassari Habl al-Qarid li Sa'adat al-Murid, Safinat al-Najah.

Al-Makassari Mathalib al-Salikin.

Al-Makassari Risalat al-Ghayat al-Ikhtisar wa al-Nihiyat al-Intizar.

Al-Makassari, Mathalib al-Salikin.

Al-Makassari Sirr al-Asrar.

Al-Makassari Zubdat al-Asrar.

Endnotes:

¹To mention some of the most recent studies on Al-Makassari: Abu Hamid, 1990; “Syekh Yusuf Tajul Khalwati: Suatu Kajian Antropologi Agama”, unpubl. doctoral diss, Ujung Pandang: Universitas Hasanuddin; Tudjimah et al., 1987. Syekh Yusuf Makassar: Riwayat Hidup, Karya dan Ajarannya, Jakarta: Dep. P&K; E.P.J. von Kleist, 1986. “Ein indonesischer des 17 Jahrhunderts in Südafrika: Zwei Sendschreiben des Scheichs Yusuf Makassar”, unpubl. MA thesis, Freiburg: Albert-Ludwigs-Universität; Suleman Essop Dangor, 1982. Shaykh Yusuf, Durban: Kat Bros; H.A. Massiara, 1983. Syekh Yusuf Tuanta Salamaka dari Gowa, Jakarta: Yayasan Lakipadada; I.D. du Plessis, 1970. Sjeg Joesoef, Kaapstad: Nasionale Bookhandel; Nabilah Lubis, 1996. Syekh Yusuf al-Taj al-Makassari: Menyingkap Intisari Segala Rahasia, Bandung: Mizan, EFEO & FS UI; M.R. Feener, 1999. “Syaiikh Yusuf and the Appreciation of Muslim Saints in Modern Indonesia”, in Journal for Islamic Studies, 18/19: 112-31.

²The work, entitled Lontara Bilang, is the oldest historiography of the Kingdoms of Gowa and Tallo in South Sulawesi. It is written in Macassarese according to the hijrah calendar, and it has generally been considered reliable by historians of the region. The Annals is edited and translated into Dutch by A. Lightvoet, 1880; “Transcriptie van het Dagboek der Vorsten van Gowa en Tello”, in Bijdragen tot de Taal-, Land- en Volkenkunde (Journal of the Humanities and Social Sciences of Southeast Asia (hereafter: BKI), 4, IV:1259 and (henceforth, Dagboek). Reference to Al-Makassari’s date of birth is given on p.90. For discussion on the Annals, see, J. Noorduyn, “Origins of South Celebes Historical Writings”, in Soedjatmoko et al. (eds.), 1965. An Introduction to Indonesian Historiography, Ithaca: Cornell University Press, pp.137-155; A.A. Cense, 1966. “Old Buginese and Macassarese Diaries”, in BKI, 122: 416-428.

³*Masuknya Islam di Sulawesi Selatan*, Ujung Pandang: Balai Penelitian Lektur, 1985-6, 43. Cf. Hamid, “Syekh Yusuf”, 104-5.

⁴For a history of Islamization of the region, see, J. Noorduyn, 1956. “De Islamisering van Makassar”, in BKI, 112: 247-66; C. Pelras, 1985. “Religion, Tradition and the Dynamics of Islamization in South Sulawesi”, in Archipel, 29: 107-35; Mattulada, 1983. “Islam di Sulawesi Selatan”, in Taufik Abdullah (ed.), Agama dan Perubahan Sosial, Jakarta: Rajawali, pp.209-321; Bugis-Makassar 1982 dalam Peta Islamisasi Indonesia, Ujung Pandang: IAIN Alauddin.

⁵Mattulada, “Islam”, 236, 239-40; Pelras, “Religion”, 121-2.

⁶*Dagboek*, 105.

⁷*Ibid*, 105.

⁸See discussion preceding in chapter 3 on al-Raniri.

⁹Hawash Abdullah, 1980. Perkembangan Ilmu Tasawwuf dan Tokoh-tokohnya di Nusantara, Surabaya: Al-Ikhlash, pp.62-5; Hamka, 1963. “Sjeich Jusuf Tadju’l Chalwati (Tuanta Salamaka), 1626-1699”, in Perbendaharaan Lama, Medan: Madju, p.40.

¹⁰Al-Makassari, Safinat al-Najah, cited in Hamka, Sjech Jusuf”, 40-1. Cf. Tudjimah et al., Syekh Yusuf, 22-3.

¹¹Al-Attas, Raniri, 13. I was unable to substantiate this account, for al-Attas gives no reference to it.

¹²Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Jakarta National Library, MS Naskah Arab 101, 25.

¹³J.O. Voll, 1987. “Linking Groups in the Networks of Eighteenth-Century Revivalist Scholars: The Mizjaji Family in Yemen”, in N. Levtzion & J.O. Voll (eds.), Eighteenth Century Renewal and Reform in Islam, Syracuse: Syracuse University Press, p.72.

¹⁴Al-Muhibbi, Khulasat al-Athar, II, 283.

- ¹⁵Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, MS Naskah Arab A-101, 25; Safinat al-Najah, cited, in Tudjimah et al., Syekh Yusuf, 23.
- ¹⁶See, Al-Makassari, Safinat al-Najah, cited in Tudjimah et al., Syekh Yusuf, 23; Hamka, “Sjech Jusuf”, 40.
- ¹⁷See, Al-Muhibbi, Khulasat al-Athar, III: 193.
- ¹⁸*Ibid*, III, 192-3
- ¹⁹Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab 101, 25; Safinat al-Najah, cited in Tudjimah et al., Syekh Yusuf, 23.
- ²⁰See MSS Yahuda 2393 and 2395 in R. Mach, 1977. Catalogue of Arabic Manuscripts (Yahuda Section) in the Garrett Collection Princeton University Library, Princeton: Princeton University Press, p.205. Al-Kurani’s commentary is not mentioned in al-Baghdadi’s Hadiyyat al-’Arifin nor in Brockelmann’s GAL.
- ²¹See, Nicolas Heer, The Precious Pearl: Al-Jami’s al-Durrah al-Fakhirah together with his Glosses and the Commentary of ‘Abd al-Ghafur al-Lari, Albany: State University of New York, p.101 and p.25.
- ²²Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab.
- ²³See, al-Kattani, Fahras, II, 829.
- ²⁴See, Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab 101, 25; Abdullah, Perkembangan Ilmu Tasawwuf, 60.
- ²⁵For a complete account of Muhammad Mirza, see, Al-Muhibbi, Khulasat al-Athar, IV:202-3.
- ²⁶For further details of Ayyub al-Khalwati’s biography and works, see, Mustafa Fath Allah al-Hawawi, Fawa'id al-Irtihal wa Nata'ij al-Safar, 3 vols, Cairo, MS Dar al-Kutub al-Mishriyyah, Tarikh 1093, II, fols. 87-8; Al-Muhibbi, Khulasat al-Athar, I: 428-33. For his connection in the networks, see, al-Kattani, Fahras, I: 133, 252, 497, 505; II: 558.
- ²⁷See, Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab 101, 25; Safinat al-Najah, cited in Tudjimah et al., Syekh Yusuf, 23; Hamka, “Sjech Jusuf”, 40.
- ²⁸Hamka, “Sjech Jusuf”, 41; Tudjimah et al., Syekh Yusuf, 19.
- ²⁹See, Djirong Basang (trans.), 1981. Riwayat Syekh Yusuf dan Kisah Makkutaknang Daeng Mannuntungi, Jakarta: Dep. P&K, pp.149-150; Anonymous, 1969. “Riwayat’na Tuanta Salamaka Rigowa”, typescript, Makassar: pp. 19-20.
- ³⁰Hamid, “Syekh Yusuf”, 110; Hamka, “Sjech Jusuf”, 42.
- ³¹Dangor, Shaykh Yusuf, 2-3; Hamid, “Syekh Yusuf”, 111.
- ³²Hamid, “Syekh Yusuf”, 111; Martin van Bruinessen, 1990. “The Origins and Development of the Naqshbandi Order in Indonesia”, in Der Islam, 67: 157.
- ³³Hamka, “Sjech Jusuf”, 41-2.
- ³⁴A.M. Amansyah, 1975. “Tentang Lontara Syekh Yusuf Tajul Halawatiyah”, unpubl. typescript, Ujung Pandang: Perpustakaan Universitas Hasanuddin, pp.7-8.
- ³⁵Mattulada, “Islam di Sulawesi Selatan”, 241.
- ³⁶Pelras, “Religion”, 123-5.
- ³⁷Hamid, “Syekh Yusuf”, 111-2.
- ³⁸“Hikajat Sjeich Joesoef van H.S.D. Moentoe Labbakang, Pangkadjene”, unpubl. typescript, Coll. A.A. Cense, Leiden University, KITLV Or. 545-218, pp. 56-7.

- ³⁹Dangor, Shaykh Yusuf, 3.
- ⁴⁰See, Mattulada, "Islam", 243-4; Hamka, "Sjeh Jusuf", 41-2; Pelras, "Religion", 123-4.
- ⁴¹See, Daghregister 1679, 429; Daghregister 1680, 705; Cf. A.A. Cense, "De verering van Sjaich Jusuf in Zuid Celebes", in Bingkisan Budi, Leiden: Sijhoff, 1950, 51.
- ⁴²Labbakang, "Hikajat", 65; Dagboek, 154; Massiara, Syekh Yusuf, 62; Dangor, Shaykh Yusuf, 4; Hamid, "Syekh Yusuf", 113.
- ⁴³B.H.M. Vlekke, 1959. Nusantara: A History of Indonesia, The Hague & Bandung: van Hoeve, p.177; M.C. Ricklefs, 1990. A History of Modern Indonesia, London: Macmillan, p.175.
- ⁴⁴See, Daghregister 1679, 429.
- ⁴⁵*Daghregister 1666-1667*, 140, 289, 292; Daghregister 1670-1671, 264, 273; Daghregister 1674, 12, 127, 157, 196, 271.
- ⁴⁶*Daghregister 1680*, 606.
- ⁴⁷G.W.J. Drewes, 1926. "Sjeh Joesoep Makasar", Djawa, 6: 84-5; B.J.O. Schrieke, 1957, Indonesian Sociological Studies, 2 vols, The Hague & Bandung: Van Hoeve, II, 242.
- ⁴⁸*Daghregister 1680*, 97, 269, 705.
- ⁴⁹Labbakang, "Hikajat", 56-7; Basang (trans.), Riwayat Syekh Yusuf, 158-60; B.F. Matthes, 1885. "Boegineese en Makassaarsche Legendén", in BKI, 34: 449-52.
- ⁵⁰See, F. de Haan, 1912. Priangan: De Preanger-regentschappen onder het Nederlandsch bestuur tot 1811, Batavia & 's-Gravenhage, Kolf & Nijhoff, III, 282; Drewes, "Sjeh Joesoep", 85.
- ⁵¹For further accounts of the meeting between Al-Makassari and 'Abd al-Muhyi, see an untitled MS in the collection of Al-Makassari's works, Jakarta National Library, Naskah Arab 101, 64.
- ⁵²Drewes, "Sjeh Joesoep", 85; Uka Tjandra Sasmita, Musuh Besar Kompeni Belanda: Sultan Ageng Tirtayasa, Jakarta: Nusalarang, 1967, 35-6.
- ⁵³*Ibid*, 35-6.
- ⁵⁴F.W. Stapel, 1939. Geschiedenis van Nederlandsch Indie, 5 vols., Amsterdam: Joost van den Vondel, II: 414.
- ⁵⁵*Ibid*; Dangor, Shaykh Yusuf, 15.
- ⁵⁶For detailed accounts of Sultan Ageng's conduct of the war, see, de Haan, Priangan, III, 238-78; Sasmita, Musuh Besar Kompeni, 38-46.
- ⁵⁷de Haan, Priangan, III, 282; Sasmita, Musuh Besar Kompeni, 46-7.
- ⁵⁸de Haan, Priangan, III, 282-3; Dagboek, 154; Drewes, "Sjeh Joesoep", 86. Cf. Sasmita, Musuh Besar Kompeni, 48-9.
- ⁵⁹Drewes, "Sjeh Joesoep", 85.
- ⁶⁰de Haan, Priangan, III, 283; Drewes, "Sjeh Joesoep",
- ⁶¹See, for instance, A.L. Abu Bakar (ed.), 1990. Melayu Sri Lanka, Kuala Lumpur: Gapena; B.A. Hussainmiya, 1990. Orang Rejimen: The Malays of the Ceylon Rifle Regiment, Bangi: Universiti Kebangsaan Malaysia, ; "A Brief Historical Note on the Malay Migration to Sri Lanka", in Jebat, 14: 65-92, 1986.
- ⁶²Of about 29 works attributed to Al-Makassari, no fewer than eight were written in Ceylon: al-Barakat al-Saylaniyyah, al-Nafahat al-Saylaniyyah, al-Manhat al-Saylaniyyah fi al-Manhat al-Rahmaniyyah, Kayfiyat al-Munghi fi al-Ithbat bi al-Hadith al-Qudsi, Habl al-Qarid li Sa'adat al-Murid, Safinat al-Najah, Mathalib al-Salikin, and Risalat al-Ghayat al-Ikhtisar wa al-Nihiyat al-Intizar. See, the collection of Al-Makassari's works in Jakarta National Library, Naskah Arab No. 101 and Naskah Arab 108; Tudjimah et al., Syekh Yusuf, 20-26; Voorhoeve, Handlist of Arabic Manuscripts, 539; Hamid, "Syekh Yusuf", 155-60.

⁶³According to Hussainmiya, several Malay families in Sri Lanka (formerly Ceylon) in the present time still claim that they are descendants of prominent Malay-Indonesian rulers and princes who live as exiles on the island. Among them is Mas Ghaise Weerabangsa, who possesses a manuscript which states that his family descended from Al-Makassari. See, Hussainmiya, Orang Rejimen, 80, 86 n.15.

⁶⁴Hussainmiya, Orang Rejimen, 38-8; T.J.P. Ahtmat J.P., "Kedatangan Orang Melayu ke Sri Lanka", in Abu Bakar (ed.), Melayu Sri lanka, 13-15.

⁶⁵Al-Makassari, Safinat al-Najah, cited in Hamka, "Sjech Jusuf", 45.

⁶⁶Cf. his introductory notes to his works, written in Ceylon, in Tudjimah et al., Syekh Yusuf, 20, 22, 23-5, 26.

⁶⁷Hamka, "Sjech Jusuf: 46-7; Tudjimah et al., Syekh Yusuf, 20. I was unable to substantiate this account from Indian and Dutch sources.

⁶⁸See, Al-Makassari, Risalat al-Ghayat, summarized in Tudjimah et al., Syekh Yusuf, 26, 107-10.

⁶⁹Among them were the Bustan al-Salatin, Sirat al-Mustaqim of al-Raniri, Sakarot al-Mawt and Kitab al-Fara'id of al-Sinkili. Rashid Ahmad also mentions that Al-Makassari's works are found in Ceylon (today's Sri Lanka), but he gives no titles. There is also Hidayat al-Salikin of 'Abd al-Samad al-Palimbani. See, Hussainmiya, Orang Rejimen, esp. 138-40; Rashid Ahmad, "Gapena Pelopori Usaha Menjalin Hubungan yang Terputus", 26; A.S. Yahya, "Budaya Bertulis Melayu Sri Lanka", 67-72; Arifin Said, "Manuskrip Melayu di Sri Lanka", 73-6; Abu Hassan Sham, "Malay Manuscripts and Sri Lanka", 153-60. All the last four articles are in Abu Bakar (ed.), Melayu Sri lanka.

⁷⁰The fact that there were attempts among Malay-Indonesian exiles to collaborate with their fellow Muslims in the Archipelago in struggles against the Dutch has been shown by Hussainmiya for the period of the eighteenth century. There is reason to believe that such connections also in the period of Al-Makassari. See, Hussainmiya, Orang Rejimen, 42-3.

⁷¹J.S. Mayson, 1861. The Malays of Cape Town, Manchester, J. Galt & Co, p.11; I.D. du Plessis, 1946. The Cape Malays, Johannesburg, South African Institute of Race Relations, p.2; F.R. Bradlow, 1978. "The Origins of the Early Cape Muslims", in F.R. Bradlow & Margaret Cairns, The Early Cape Muslims: A Study of Their Mosques, Genealogy and Origins, Cape Town: A.A. Balkema, pp.81-90; C. Greyling, 1980. "Schech Yusuf, the Founder of Islam in South Africa", in Religion in Southern Africa, I, 1: 10-11; M.J. Swart, 1961. "The Karamat of Sheik Yussef", in South African Panorama, 6: 18.

⁷²See, for instance, S.M. Zwemer, 1925. "Islam at Cape Town", in Moslem World, 15(4): 328; du Plessis, The Cape Malays, 2; F. R. Bradlow, 1981. "Islam at the Cape of Good Hope", in Suid-Afrikaanse Historiese Joernaal, 13: 9; J.M. Cuoq, 1975. Les Musulmans en Afrique, Paris: Misonoeuve & Larose, p.490.

⁷³K.M. Jeffreys, 1939. "Sheikh Joseph at the Cape", in Cape Naturalist, 6: 195. For the earliest references to the shaykh in South Africa, see, Francois Valentyn, 1724-1726. Oud en Nieuw Oost-Indien, Dordrecht/Amsterdam, III: 208-9; IV: 109, 123; V: 47; K. Scherzer, 1861. Narrative of the Circumnavigation of the Globe by the Austrian Frigate Novara in the Years 1857, 1858 and 1859, London, I: 245-8. For later accounts, see, G. McCall Theal, 1909. History and Ethnography of Africa South of the Zambesi, 3 vols., London: Swan Sonnenschein, II: 263; A. van Selms, 1958. "Yussuf (Joseph), Sheik", in W.J. de Kock (ed.), Dictionary of South African Biographies, p.893; Greyling, "Schech Yusuf", 15-6; Dangor, Shaykh Yusuf, 27-8.

⁷⁴du Plessis, The Cape Malays, 4; Greyling, "Schech Yusuf", 16.

⁷⁵du Plessis, The Cape Malays, 4; Dangor, Syekh Yusuf, 29. Cf. Bradlow, "Islam at the Cape", 16.195.

⁷⁶Dangor, Shaykh Yusuf, 59; Jeffreys, "Sheik Joseph", 195

⁷⁷Achmat Davids, 1981. "Politics and the Muslims of Cape Town: A Historical Survey", in Studies in the History of Cape Town, 4: 174, 177-9; Dangor, Shaykh Yusuf, 29; E.A. Walker, 1962. A History of Southern Africa, 3rd ed., London: Longmans, p.72.

⁷⁸Zwemer, "Islam at Cape Town", 327.

⁷⁹*Ibid*, 330.

⁸⁰See, Carl P. Thunberg, 1795. Travels in Europe, Africa and Asia, 4 vols., London: F. and C. Rivingston, I: 132-4.

⁸¹Mayson, The Malays, 19-20.

⁸²Cited in I.D. du Plessis & C.A. Luckhoff, 1953. The Malay Quarter and Its People, Cape Town: A.A. Balkema, p.36.

⁸³See, L.Y. Andaya, 1981. The Heritage of Arung Palakka: A History of South Sulawesi (Celebes) in the Seventeenth Century, The Hague: Nijhoff, pp. 273, 276-77.

⁸⁴*Ibid*, 273; Jeffrey, "Sheikh Joseph", 195; Dangor, Shaykh Yusuf, 32.

⁸⁵*Dagboek*, 169; de Haan, Priangan, I I I, 283.

⁸⁶For a detailed description of Al-Makassari's karamat (tomb), see, I.D. du Plessis, 1972. The Cape Malays: History, Religion, Traditions, Folk Tales of the Malay Quarter, Cape Town: A.A. Balkema, pp.4-5; du Plessis & Luckhoff, The Malay Quarter, 35-7; Dangor, Syekh Yusuf, 51-2; K.M. Jeffreys, 1938. "The Karamat at Zandvlei, Faure. Sheikh Joseph in the East", in The Cape Naturalist, 5:15-17.

⁸⁷Van Selm, "Yussuf (Joseph), Sheik", 893; Drewes, Hsjech Joesoep", 86-7.

⁸⁸de Haan, Priangan, III, 284; Dagboek, 176; Drewes, "Sjech Joesoep", 87.

⁸⁹For a detailed description of the reverence paid by Muslims in South Sulawesi to Al-Makassari, see, Cense, "De verering"; Hamid, "Syekh Yusuf", 137-9

⁹⁰de Haan, Priangan, III, 283-4.

⁹¹Greyling, "Schech Yusuf", 17.

⁹²Matthes, "Boeginese", 451-2.

⁹³Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab 101,2.

⁹⁴Al-Makassari, Mathalib al-Salikin, Naskah Arab 101, 81-2.

⁹⁵Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab 101, 23; Mathalib al-Salikin, Naskah Arab 101, 81; Sirr al-Asrar, Naskah Arab 101, 86; Zubdat al-Asrar, Naskah Arab 101,31; Daf' al-Bala', in Tudjimah et al., Syekh Yusuf, esp. 99.

⁹⁶Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab 101, 22; Zubdat al-Asrar, Naskah Arab 101, 32.

⁹⁷Al-Makassari, Zubdat al-Asrar, Naskah Arab 101, 38-9.

⁹⁸Al-Makassari, Taj al-Asrar, Naskah Arab 101. 76-7; Kayfiyat al-Munghi, in Tudjimah et al., 43-44. Cf. Hamid, "Syekh Yusuf", 197-8.

⁹⁹Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab 101, 2.

¹⁰⁰*Ibid*; 28; Qurrat al-'Ayn, Naskah Arab 101, 54-5.

¹⁰¹Al-Makassari, al-Fawa'ih al-Yusufiyyah, Naskah Arab 108, 80-1; Tuhfat al-Abrar, Naskah Arab 101, 78-9; al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab 101, 8-9.

¹⁰²Al-Makassari, Zubdat al-Asrar, Naskah Arab 101, 36-7; al-Fawa'ih al-Yusufiyyah, Naskah Arab 108, 80-1.

- ¹⁰³ Al-Makassari, Zubdat al-Asrar, Naskah Arab 101, 39.
- ¹⁰⁴ Abd al-Karim al-Jili, 1983. Universal Man, extracts trans. with commentary by T. Burckhardt, English trans. by Angela Culme-Seymour, Paris: Beshara Publication, pp.39, 45, 48.
- ¹⁰⁵ Al-Makassari, Sirr al-Asrar, Naskah Arab 101, 95.
- ¹⁰⁶ Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab 101, 12.
- ¹⁰⁷ Al-Makassari, al-Barakat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab 108, 71. Cf. al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab 101, 4-5.
- ¹⁰⁸ Al-Makassari, al-Fawa'ih al-Yusufiyyah, Naskah Arab 108, 83; Qurrat al-'Ayn, Naskah Arab 101, 52; Sirr al-Asrar, Naskah Arab 101, 94.
- ¹⁰⁹ Al-Makassari, Zubdat al-Asrar, Naskah Arab 101, 37.
- ¹¹⁰ Ibid, 42
- ¹¹¹ Al-Makassari al-Fawa'ih al-Yusufiyyah, Naskah Arab 108, 82; al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab, 101, 4; Taj al-Asrar, Naskah Arab 101, 73-4.
- ¹¹² Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab 101, 4; Taj al-Asrar, Naskah Arab 101, 74.
- ¹¹³ Al-Makassari, Sirr al-Asrar, Naskah Arab 101, 94.
- ¹¹⁴ Al-Makassari, Mathalib al-Salikin, Naskah Arab 101, 85.
- ¹¹⁵ Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab 101, 23-4.
- ¹¹⁶ Ibid, 2.
- ¹¹⁷ Ibid, 24-5.
- ¹¹⁸ Al-Makassari, al-Nafhat al-Saylaniyyah, Naskah Arab 101, 5, 24-5. I was unable to verify this citation, claimed to have been a statement of Ibn `Arabi, in the latter's works.
- ¹¹⁹ Al-Makassari, Tuhfat al-Asrar, cited in Tudjimah et.al., Syekh Yusuf, 114.
- ¹²⁰ For a detailed exposition of devotional services related to dhikr, see, Al-Makassari, Fath al-Kayfiyyat al-Dhikr, Naskah Arab 108, 62-66; Tuhfat al-Amr fi Fadhilat al-Dhikr, Naskah Arab 101, 78-80.
- ¹²¹ Al-Makassari, Tuhfat al-Amr, Naskah Arab 101, 79.

CHAPTER TWO

Shaykh Yusuf al-Makassarī : A Bibliographic Review

Baharuddin Abd Rahman

Abstract

The chapter describes Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari who was a great Muslim personality. The Shaykh was born in the Melayu Archipelago's Makassar (South Celebes now referred to as South Sulawesi). As he searched for knowledge, he gradually made his mark in the history of Islam in the Archipelago as well as in Cabo de Goede Hoop at the tip of the African continent. Al-Makassari, as some called him, was not only known as a great Sufi who was given the title of tāj al-khalwatī, but he was also a noted warrior; a heroic figure who was forced into exile where he continued to inspire others because of his teachings and his physical struggle against the Dutch represented by the VOC. The chapter, however, conducts a literature review approach in which it highlights the phases of Al-Makassari's life. It starts from the first phase that covers his birth, and, thereafter, tracing his wanderings from the Archipelago to the Arabian Peninsula where he went to study. It then charts out the second phase that was characterized by his sincere devotion towards the ummah and his struggle to expel the VOC as a colonial power; and the last phase described his exile to Ceylon and the Cape of Good Hope; he spent a few years in exile at the Cape where he eventually died.

Keywords: al-Makassarī, Archipelago, Cabo de Goede Hoop, VOC.

1. Introduction

Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari established himself as one of the Archipelago's inspirational figures. He was not only recognized for his scholarship for having produced many religious texts, but he also became known beyond the Archipelago as a reputable Sufi Shaykh. On top of that and after serving his society for many years, he was acknowledged as a brave jihadist; apart from having supported the Banten royalty against the VOC that colonized much of Archipelago, he demonstrated to all during that period that he was able to lead the fight against the colonizers.

Before focusing on the phases of Shaykh Yusuf al-Makassarī's eventful and enchanting life, the chapter first touches briefly on the process of the Islamisation of Makassar, South Sulawesi; this is the place where al-Makassarī was born and spent his youth. The name 'Makassar' refers to an ethnic group, a kingdom, and a language used by the twin kingdoms of Gowa and Tallo. Both kingdoms had effective control of South Sulawesi around the sixteenth century.

2. Islam's Arrival to the Kingdom of Makassar

According to a local source, the dividing of the Kingdom of Makassar into Gowa and Tallo was done by King Tunangkaklopi to reduce conflict between the two crown princes.¹ The older brother, Batara Gowa was given the power to govern the Kingdom of Gowa whereas his younger brother, Karaeng Loe ri Sero, was given the authority to govern the Kingdom of Tallo. However, in the interest of maintaining the authority and greatness of the Kingdom of Makassar, both crown princes agreed to keep the territories united, which was known as the zusterstaaten (sister states) agreement. And so, it formed the twin kingdom of Gowa-Tallo where the Kingdom of Tallo was subordinate to and within the supervision and control of the Kingdom of Gowa.²

Although this was the case, it was only with the leadership of I Mariogauk Daeng Bonto Karaeng Lakiung (the 10th king who ruled from 1546–1565), I Tajibarani Daeng Marompa Karaeng Datta Tunibatta, I Manggorai Daeng Mammeta Karaeng Bonto Langkasa Tunijallo and I Teppukaraeng Daeng Parabbung Tunipasulu (respectively the 11th, 12th, and 13th kings) that the twin kingdoms achieved their height of glory; they became the greatest kingdoms in South Sulawesi.

It can be shown conclusively that when the Portuguese colonial power occupied Malacca in 1511, Gowa-Tallo were known as maritime kingdoms; and they had become the most important trading centres in eastern part of the Archipelago. Since Gowa-Tallo developed into a major trading base, these kingdoms attracted Muslim traders who arrived in large numbers and many eventually chose to settle in these kingdoms.

Some sources state, that during I Manggorai Daeng Mammeta Karaeng Bonto Langkasa's rule, in 1580,³ there were Muslim traders who had come from Pahang, Patani, Johor and Sumatra. This community resided and remained in Mangallekana, Somba Opu, the capital of the Kingdom of Gowa. The King of Gowa, Bonto Langkasa,⁴ paid particular attention to their presence even giving them the same status and rights as the Kingdom of Gowa's native population.⁵

As can be expected, the Malay traders were not only businesspeople who were active in trading; some were also muballigh (Muslim preachers) with a high level of commitment to spreading Islam. Their da'wah (proselytizing [approach]) was centred on mosques which they managed with the patronage of the nobility and the King of Gowa. Helped by three ulama (Muslim clerics), who came from Minangkabau, West Sumatra at the end of the 16th Century, namely Abdullah Ma'mur Chatib Tunggal (known as Dato' ri Bandang), Chatib Sulaiman (known as Dato' ri Pattimang) and Chatib Bungsu (known as Dato' ri Tiro), their proselytizing continued with commendable results. The residents in the Kingdom of Makassar came in droves to embrace Islam; this was clear proof of their success when they undertook da'wah. And in fact, in 1605, several members of the nobility including the King of Gowa-Tallo followed their countrymen in embracing Islam.⁶

However, the preachers' commitment to da'wah did not just stop here. With a mature appreciation and strategy, all three of these dignitaries continued their journey of proselytization and left for the Kingdom of Luwu'. They were convinced that the success of the proselytizing in Luwu' would then open up other areas such as the South Sulawesi kingdoms that eventually embraced Islam. This conviction was based on the reality, that the Kingdom of Luwu' was viewed as the symbol of nobility; that the 'blue blood' which flowed within the nobles of South Sulawesi found its way into the Kingdom of Luwu'; and that the Kingdom of Luwu' was the first and the oldest kingdom in South Sulawesi, and because of that, the kings of South Sulawesi gave the highest possible respect and appreciation to the King of Luwu'.⁷

The result was on 16 Ramadan 1013 (Hijrah – the Muslim calendar and that corresponded to 5 February 1605), the King of Luwu', Dato' La Patiware Daeng Parabbung, who witnessed the preachers' exalted piety, authority, and morality, became enamoured and with a humble heart took an oath of loyalty to Islam. He pledged 'du'a kalimah shahādah' (that is the supplication that affirmed their belief in Allah and in Muhammad as His [final] prophet); this he did in front of the three venerable figures.⁸

Officially, the King of Luwu' became a mu'allaf (convert to Islam), and His Majesty Luwu' then bore the title Sultan Muhammad. The king subsequently gave a position to and in fact patronage for the spread of Islam in his realm. Further, the three honourable figures organised strategic steps by dividing the respective proselytisation areas. They were agreed to leave Dato' ri Pattimang in Luwu' to preach (tablīgh) the Muslim faith. And this included: teaching basic Islamic knowledge such as studying the Quran and qirā'ah (reciting it), studying Islamic jurisprudence, and deepening their understanding of 'Ilmu Tawhīd' (the Oneness of Allah); the latter was integrated into local teachings; and it became known as dewata seuwvae (the Oneness of God).⁹

The conversion of the King of Luwu' was a significant development; it was expected to pave the way for the acceptance of the proselytization process in other states such as South Sulawesi. After bidding farewell to the king, both Dato' then left Luwu'; they, however, went off to different destinations: Dato' ri Tiro was tasked to undertake tablīgh in Tiro, Bulukumba, while Dato' ri Bandang returned to the twin kingdoms of Gowa-Tallo.

According to sources, Dato' ri Bandang's arrival in the Kingdom of Makassar was enthusiastically welcomed by the locals. In fact, King Tallo who was also the Prime Minister of Gowa Kingdom, Karaeng Matoaya I Malingkaang Daeng Manyonri' Karaeng Katangka, greeted them on their arrival as royal guests. On the same day, Karaeng Katangka declared himself as a Muslim by pronouncing shahādatayn (belief in Allah and in his prophet Muhammad). He then gained the title Sultān 'Abdullāh Awwal al-Islām.¹⁰

The conversion of the King of Tallo occurred on Friday, 9 Jumad al-Awwal (22 September 1605).¹¹ This was followed by conversion of the kingdom's elite such as the royal family; and the most important who was converted among them was I Mangarangi Daeng Manrabia, the Prince of Gowa, who bore the title Sultān 'Alā al-Dīn. With the conversion of the King of the twin kingdoms, Gowa-Tallo officially became a Muslim kingdom.

During his reign, Jumu'at Ṣalāt (Friday ritual prayer) was conducted on 19 Rajab 1016 (9 November 1607) in a new mosque built in Tallo Kingdom.¹² Not long after declaring itself a Muslim Kingdom, Makassar then sent emissaries to invite friendly kingdoms to accept Islam as their official religion. Among the kingdoms to warmly receive them and that were willing to accept these teachings were the Kingdoms of Sawitto, Bacukiki, Suppa', Mandar, Akkotengeng and Sakkoli. During 1609, they were followed by Wajo and Bone. In this way, except for Toraja, almost all the kingdoms in South Sulawesi had accepted and declared Islam as their official religion.¹³

Dato' ri Bandang, who played an important role in the spreading of Islam in the Makassar Kingdom with complete dedication, provided guidance and education. However, this was not as easy as it appeared, it required a long process and struggle. Moreover, it is acknowledged that at the time the Dato' (the leadership) had to come face to face with a situation where their society was stubborn in character and upheld cultural values, customs and traditions which, for such a long time, had been passed down from their ancestors. As a result, their pride in their old inheritance always remained strongly held on to.

Consequently, a new culture, whatever its form it seems, would always face various types of difficulties in taking root. It was this which motivated Dato' ri Bandang to focus his thoughts and efforts on establishing a pesantren (a Muslim boarding school) where the community could be trained and educated, and where they obtained an understanding of Islam's values and its culture. With the agreement and patronage of the King of Makassar, a pesantren was established where al-Makassarī became an early alumnus of its educational system.

3. Phases of Al- Makassarī's Life

Al- Makassarī's life can be divided into three phases. The first phase (circa 1626–1644) covered the period when he was born and grew up; and it included his exposure to the basic knowledge of Islam. This 18-year period was spent in his city of birth, Makassar. During this time, he spent 15 years learning the Qur'an, tajwīd (reciting it with correct pronunciation) and qirā'ah (method of reading it), Arabic, 'ilmu fiqh (Islamic jurisprudence), 'ilmu kalām (Islamic theology) and taṣawwuf (teachings of Sufism: how to become closer to Allah).

The second phase was a rihlah 'ilmiah (that is, a journey of seeking knowledge). It began during 1644 when al- Makassarī left his city of birth and travelled to the holy city of Mecca to perform the pilgrimage until his return to the homeland in 1670. In this phase, al- Makassarī spent about 26 years in dedication to deepening his knowledge of Islam; he attended various knowledge circles and was taught by prominent Muslim figures who were shaykh of the ṭarīqah (that is, they were teachers of the Sufi path [that accessed knowledge of and about Allah]).

The third phase was where al-Makassarī worked as the senior mufti (qādī malik al-'adl) (Muslim jurist cum theologian) who issued decisions on matters relating to Islamic law (Sultan's adviser) in the Sultanate of Banten, West Java. This phase began with his arrival in the Sultanate of Banten in 1670 to his exile by the Dutch colonialists to Cabo de Goede Hoop, South Africa where al-Makassarī died in 1699. In this phase, al-Makassarī dedicated much time to creating written works. This phase was marked by his determined struggle to defend his country from the grip of the Dutch colonialists.

3.1 First Phase: Birth and Early Education

His full name is Muḥammad Yūsuf bin 'Abdullāh al-Khidr Abū al-Maḥāsīn al-Tāj al-Khalwatī Ḥidāyatullāh al-Makassarī, known in the Makassar Community as Tuanta Salamaka ri Gowa (The leader from the Kingdom of Gowa who brought happiness). Al-Makassarī was born in Gowa on 8 Shawwal 1036 (3 Juli 1626). His mother's name was Āminah, with a line of descent from the King of Tallo' while his father, 'Abdullāh was of noble descent related to I Mangga'rangi Daeng Manrabia, Sulṭān 'Alā al-Dīn raja Gowa, XIV. Although al-Makassarī was son of a Makassar noble, he never returned to the kingdom after his departure to Mecca to perform the pilgrimage in 1644 until his dying in exile in Cabo de Goede Hoop in 1699.¹⁴

As the son of nobles who lived among the royal family, the young al-Makassarī was not immediately absorbed in royal facilities, and the abundance of luxury in front of him, as would befit a nobleman of his age. On the contrary, he turned his back on the charms which dazzled the eyes and made himself busy by filling the time by studying Al-Qur'an: the qirā'ah and tajwīd under the guidance of Daeng ri Tasamang.

With the support of the King of Gowa, al-Makassarī continued his studies at Bontoala, an Islamic studies centre, where he studied and learned various Islamic theological traditions from Sayyid Bā 'Alawī bin 'Abdullāh al-Allāmah al-Taḥīr, then at the Cikoang pesantren (Muslim boarding school) where he studied under Shaikh Jalāl al-Dīn al-'Aidid, a well-known muballigh (preacher) who came from Aceh and successfully gained the sympathy of the King of Gowa, Sulṭān al-Malik al-Sa'īd (1636-1653); as a result the King of Gowa's patronage, al-Aidid established a pesantren in Cikoang in 1640.¹⁵

Al-Makassarī studied under the 'Ulamā and muballigh who were stationed at the Bontoala and Cikoang pesantren; with them, he studied the Muslim theological traditions such as studying Arabic, Al-Qur'an, tajwīd, qirā'ah, Arabic, 'ilmu fiqh, 'ilmu kalām, and taṣawwuf for several years. Al-Makassarī, however, took the initiative to further his studies in the Ḥaramayn; the two sacred mosques to which many Muslim students - from various parts of the world – flocked. They travelled to these places with the purpose of drawing knowledge from learned personalities such as shuyukh of the ṭuruq.

3.2 The Second Phase: Learning Abroad

Aceh, the city of knowledge, was nicknamed the front porch of Mecca (Serambi Makkah) crowding with 'ulamā (learned scholars) and mashā'ikh (intellectuals); they such as royal mufti (qādī malik al-'adl) came and stayed there with the purpose of disseminating knowledge. The royal mufti position was, for example, awarded to Shams al-Dīn al-Sumatrānī, Nūr al-Dīn al-Rānīrī, and 'Abd Ra'ūf al-Singkili. Shaikh al-Aidid, who held that post, suggested that al-Makassarī first study in Aceh before going to the Ḥaramayn.

Al-Makassarī then departed for Aceh in accordance with this teacher's suggestion. The sea route at the time, however, meant that al-Makassarī had to stopover at the Sultanate of Banten, West Java; this is where he made the acquaintance of and formed a friendship with the ruler of Banten, Sultan Ageng Tirtayasa whose title was Sulṭān 'Abd al-Fattāh.

After some time at the Sultanate of Banten, al-Makassarī then continued his journey of learning to Aceh with the hope of meeting with important Muslim teachers in Aceh. He arrived there during the time the kingdom was ruled by a queen; she was Sulṭānah Tāj al-'Alām Ṣafīyyat al-Dīn Shah (1641-1675 AD) and she was the wife of the late Sulṭān Iskandar al-Thānī.

Experts and historians have opposing views as to when and where al-Makassarī met with the important Muslim figure Shaikh Nūr al-Dīn Muḥammad bin 'Alī bin Ḥasanji bin Muḥammad Ḥāmid al-Qurashī al-Rānīrī (d.1658). It remains an unanswered question as to whether the meeting took place in Aceh or in India's Gujarat during al-Makassarī's journey en route to Ḥaramayn. According to al-Attas, al-Rānīrī left Aceh and returned to his country of origin, Rānīr, in 1644; and this is where he remained till the end of his life.¹⁶ What is certain is that al-Makassarī studied under Rānīrī and during that period he swore allegiance to ṭarīqah Qādirīyyah.

In Safīnat al-Najāh,¹⁷ al-Makassarī traced the ṭarīqah Qādirīyyah genealogy, which he obtained from al-Rānīrī', to Rasulullāh (the Messenger of Allah); the lineage is as follows:

1. ‘Alī bin Abī Ṭālib (d.661);
2. Ḥasan al-Baṣrī (d.728);
3. Ḥabīb al-‘Ajamī (d.737);
4. Dāwud al-Ṭā‘ī (d.781);
5. Ma’rūf al-Karkhī (d.813);
6. Sarī al-Saqatī (d.867);
7. Junaid al-Baghdādī (d.910);
8. Abū Bakr al-Shiblī (d.945);
9. Ḥamālī al-‘Ajamī;
10. ‘Alī bin al-Bariyārī;
11. Abū ‘Alī Ghulām bin Turkān;
12. Abū al-Faḍl bin Kānī;
13. ‘Alī (Abū al-Faḍl) al-Qārī al-Wāsiṭī;
14. Maṣṣūr al-Rifā‘ī (Maṣṣūr al-Bahā’ihī, d. 1145, the uncle in 15th place below);
15. Aḥmad bin Abī al-Ḥasan al-Rifā‘ī, the founder of al-Rifā‘iyyah ṭarīqah (d. 1182);
16. ‘Alī bin Uthmān (nephew of no. 15 above);
17. Muḥy al-Dīn Ibrāhīm bin al-‘Arab bin ‘Alī (nephew of number 16 above);
18. Muḥammad (cousin of number 17 above);
19. Qutb al-Dīn Abū al-Ḥasan ‘Alī bin ‘Abd al-Raḥmān al-Rifā‘ī (nephew of number 18 above);
20. Aḥmad bin Muḥammad bin ‘Abd al-Raḥmān al-Rifā‘ī (nephew of number 19 above);
21. Ṭāj al-Dīn Muḥammad bin Aḥmad bin Muḥammad bin ‘Abd al-Raḥmān al-Rifā‘ī;
22. Sayyid al-Sharīf Muḥammad bin al-Ḥasan al-Samarqandī;
23. Burhān al-Dīn Ibrāhīm al-‘Alawī;
24. Muḥammad bin Abī Bakr al-Duḡā‘ī;
25. Shaikh Ismā‘īl bin Ibrāhīm al-Jabartī;
26. Shihāb al-Dīn Aḥmad bin Abī Bakr al-Raddād;
27. Jamāl al-Dīn Muḥammad bin Sa‘īd Gīn al-Habarī;
28. Jamāl al-Dīn Muḥammad bin Mas‘ūd Abī Sakīl al-Anhārī;
29. Jamāl al-Dīn Muḥammad bin Aḥmad Faḍl;
30. Sayyid al-Shaikh Fakhr al-Dīn Abū Bakr bin ‘Abd Allāh al-‘Aydārūs al-‘Adanī (d.1508);
31. Sayyid ‘Abd Allāh bin Shaikh bin ‘Abd Allāh al-‘Aydārūs (the nephew of number 30 above);
32. Sayyid Shaikh bin Sayyid ‘Abd Allāh bin Shaikh bin ‘Abd Allāh al-‘Aydārūs, Ṣaḥīb Aḥmadabād (d.1582);
33. Sayyid ‘Abd Allāh bin Sayyid Shaikh bin Sayyid ‘Abd Allāh bin Shaikh bin ‘Abd Allāh al-‘Aydārūs, (d.1610);
34. Sayyid Muḥammad (Ṣaḥīb Sūrat) bin Sayyid ‘Abd Allāh bin Sayyid Shaikh bin Sayyid ‘Abd Allāh bin Shaikh bin ‘Abd Allāh al-‘Aydārūs (d.1620);
35. Sayyid Abū Ḥafṣ ‘Umar bin ‘Abd Allāh Bā Shaybān al-Ṭarīmī al-Ḥadrāmī (d. 1656);
36. Shaikh Nūr al-Dīn Muḥammad bin ‘Alī bin Ḥasanji bin Muḥammad Ḥāmid al-Qurashī al-Rānīrī (d.1658).¹⁸

If the dating of al-Rānīrī’s return to his hometown, Rānīr, and al-Makassarī’s study tour abroad is correct, then it is very likely that the meeting between these two figures occurred in Rānīr; the town where al-Makassarī received his Qādirīyyah ṭarīqah qualification. Likewise, it is very likely that on the suggestion of al-Rānīrī, al-Makassarī continued his study in Bijapūr. This is the city where he had the opportunity to meet and study under a Rifā'iyyah ṭarīqah teacher, Sayyid Abū Ḥafṣ 'Umar bin 'Abd Allāh Bā Shaybān al-Tarīmī al-Ḥadrāmī until he was awarded membership of this order.¹⁹

From Bijapūr, al-Makassarī then travelled to the Arabian Peninsula. The first city of knowledge sought was Yemen's Hadramaut.²⁰ Unfortunately, al-Makassarī does not tell us the year he stopped in Yemen. It can, however, be assumed that he needed some time to study there and be guided by the shuyukh (teachers); among those who mentored him was khalīfah ṭarīqah Naqshabandiyyah, Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad bin 'Abd al-Bāqī al-Mizjājī al-Naqshabandī (d. 1664).²¹ 'Abd al-Bāqī's relationship with al-Makassarī was indeed an important one.

Evidently, although he bestowed the title 'mahkota khalwati' (Sufi Khalwati order) by his teacher (as will be discussed later) because of his expertise in the ṭarīqah, al-Makassarī had a greater proclivity, based on strong historical evidence, toward Naqshabandiyyah ṭarīqah than the others. His special treatment in a detailed discussion of Naqshabandiyyah ṭarīqah in one of his manuscripts indicated that. This being the case and the conclusion that historians arrived at was the fact that apart from having spread ṭarīqah Khalwatiyyah al-Yusufiyyah in South Sulawesi, al-Makassarī was the first person who was responsible for having introduced the Naqshabandiyyah ṭarīqah in the Archipelago; a position that one can certainly accept.²²

Another teacher who guided al-Makassarī during his stay in Yemen was Sayyid 'Alī bin Muḥammad bin Abī Bakr al-Zubaidī (d.1673). He was an expert in the hadīth (the prophetic statements) and someone who was informed about the Bā 'Alawiyyah ṭarīqah. Like 'Abd al-Bāqī who informed al-Makassarī about the genealogy of Naqshabandiyyah ṭarīqah, al-Zubaidī mentored and guided al-Makassarī who became familiar with the Bā 'Alawiyyah ṭarīqah genealogy.²³

Mention should be made of the fact that besides those teachers who taught him and shared with him the ṭarīqah's mystical teachings and genealogy, al-Makassarī was also exposed to other areas of Islamic studies. He was taught various aspects of Muslim theology and its diverse traditions. It may be reasonable to assume that in each city (such as Ḥaramayn, Damascus and Anatolia) where he stayed for either short or long periods, he had teachers who were steeped in, among others, tafsīr (exegesis), hadīth, fiqh, literature, mantiq (logic), philosophy, and other branches of knowledge; from them, he gained deep insight and understanding of the Islamic sciences.

After several years in Yemen, al-Makassarī headed for Ḥaramayn. In Mecca, al-Makassarī met 'Abd Ra'ūf bin 'Alī al-Jāwī al-Singkili (d.1693).²⁴ Al-Singkili was one of the important figures who played a key role in the history of the development of Islam in the Archipelago and it was he who principally introduced ṭarīqah Shaṭṭārīyyah.²⁵ Al-Singkili's good name was popularized when he was appointed as the Aceh royal adviser (qādī malik al-'adl) by the Sultanah Aceh, Tāj al-'Alām Ṣafīyyat al-Dīn Shah (d.1675); this was upon his return from the Arabian peninsula.

Al-Makassarī listed his Ḥaramayn teachers as follows: Aḥmad al-Qushāshī (d.1661),²⁶ Shaikh al-Islām Mullā Ibrāhīm al-Kurānī (d.1690),²⁷ Ḥasan bin 'Alī bin 'Amr bin Yahyā al-‘Ajamī al-Makkī (d.1702),²⁸ Muḥammad al-Mazru’ al-Madanī, ‘Abd al-Karīm al-Hindī al-Naqshabandī al-Lahūrī,²⁹ and Muḥammad Mirza bin Muḥammad al-Dimashqī (d.1656).³⁰ Al-Makassarī, in seeking out al-Qushāshī and Ibrāhīm al-Kurānī in the Haramayn, was very likely following an instruction from al-Rānīrī. This is a sound position, remembering that Bā Saybān al-Qushāshī and al-Kurānī were teachers of the ‘ulamā’ network centre in Haramayn; they were the principal figures for the spreading of knowledge to all parts of the Muslim world and this included the Archipelago. They were prominent figures who channeled their ideas from the Arabian Peninsula to South Asia and then to the Southeast Asian region. During the 17th century, knowledge networks grew; and it was their students such as al-Rānīrī, al-Makassarī, and al-Singkili that were the key knowledge disseminators.

So far, it was found how al-Makassarī’s genius was able to absorb various knowledge disciplines throughout his study. In almost all the cities where he stopped and stayed, al-Makassarī sought out teachers. From among them were those who inducted him into the ṭuruq and in this way he became part of the growing genealogies. Al-Makassarī’s intellectual and spiritual competence were great gifts that enabled him to absorb all the knowledge that he was taught. Al-Makassarī absorbed the ṭarīqah Qādīriyyah genealogy via Rānir, the Rifā’iyyah in Bijāpur, the Naqshabandiyyah and Bā ‘Alawiyyah in Yemen, the Shattāriyyah in Madīnah, and the Khalwatiyyah, Shādhiliyyah and Madyāniyyah in Syria’s Damascus.³¹

Despite this, it is not too presumptuous to assume that the speed of spiritual and intellectual development achieved by al-Makassarī was due to special guidance from the master teacher, al-Kurānī. It was in the hands of al-Kurānī that al-Makassarī was taught the monumental tasawwuf works; he studied, among others, al-Durrah al-Fākhīrah, Risālah fī al-Wujūd, and sharḥ al-Durrah al-Fākhīrah.³² These three tasawwuf works required special intellectual and spiritual skills to understand their contents. Al-Kurānī gave al-Makassarī permission to copy them and he also tutored al-Makassarī regarding these writings. Consequently, what was found was that al-Makassarī’s teachings were greatly influenced by and drawn together by a common thread that were present in these works.

Al-Makassarī exposure compared to al-Singkili,³³ who returned to Aceh after spending about nineteen years of his life of searching in Haramayn, was different. As far as could be concluded is that al-Makassarī felt it necessary to perfect his knowledge by going to the various learning centres; he even landed up in Damascus where he pursued his studies. Here, he met Abū al-Barakāt Ayyūb bin Aḥmad bin Ayyūb al-Dimashqī al-Khalwatī (d.1661) who was a friend of al-Qushāshī, al-Makassarī’s first teacher in the Haramayn. Ayyūb al-Khalwatī, who held the title al-ustādh al-akbar (great teacher), was an expert in the fields of tasawwuf, fiqh and hadīth. The historians, al-Muhibb and al-Hamāwī expressed their admiration to Ayyūb al-Khalwatī, saying that, “no-one was able to surpass his expertise and his mastery of religious knowledge in Damascus in that period.”³⁴

Al-Makassarī never explained, after having stayed in the Haramayn for a while, the reason for having favoured Damascus where he did further studies. Was it because of the teacher who was al-Qushāshī’s colleague, namely Ayyūb al-Khalwatī? Or had al-Makassarī read Ibn ‘Arabī’s al-Futūḥāt al-Makkiyyah – a work that influenced him? Ibn ‘Arabī stated that one should “Live in Shām (Damascus) if possible, because Rasulullāh (Allah’s messenger) had said: “Look after Shām because it is an area where Allāh manifested (tajallī)

Himself, and from there Allāh will select his chosen followers!" In fact, Ibn 'Arabī himself chose Damascus and stayed there until his death.

It is possible that both reasons may be correct. Because that city became a springboard for those who wanted to advance in knowledge and who sought spiritual ascendancy. Al-Makassarī's rapid rise and quick mastery of the complexities of ṭarīqah Khalwatiyyah successfully attracted his teacher's attention. This was signified when Ayyūb al-Khalwatī, as the holder of "mahkota Khalwatiyyah" (al-Tāj al-Khalwatī), honoured and bestowed upon him permission to perpetuate the teachings of this order; it was an award that signalled that al-Makassarī had now become a notable link in Khalwatiyyah chain. He now had the opportunity to preserve the ṭarīqah; and in fact, al-Makassarī did this on his return to the Archipelago via his network of students.

The Damascene teacher who also enriched al-Makassarī's store of knowledge were 'Alī Nūr al-Dīn al-Kurdī al-Dimashqī³⁵ and Muḥammad bin Faṭḥ Allāh al-Dimashqī.³⁶ In al-Safīnat al-Najāh, al-Makassarī wrote about the interrelationships between the teacher and the students and here he referred to 'Alī Nūr al-Dīn al-Kurdī al-Dimashqī; he stated it as follows:

...my teachers, al-Muḥaqqiq al-Walī al-'Ārif bi Allāh Ṣāhib al-Kashf wa al-Wujūd, Ma'dan al-Iṭtilā' wa al-Shuhūd Sayyidī 'Alī Nūr al-Dīn al-Kurdī, gave good teachings to their students..."

"... قال الشيخ المحقق الولي العارف بالله تعالى صاحب الكشف والوجود، معدن الاطلاع والشهود سيدي علي (نور الدين الكردي الدمشقي مخاطبا لمريده ..."

Concerning his relationship with Muḥammad bin Faṭḥ Allāh al-Dimashqī, al-Makassarī quoted his teacher as follows:

"...and as has been advised to me by my teacher, al-'Ālim al-Fāḍil wa al-'Ārif al-Kāmil Sayyidī al-Shaikh Muḥammad bin Faṭḥ Allāh al-Juhairī in Damascus, Syria..."

"... ومثل ما قال لي شيعي وسيدي العالم الفاضل والعارف الكامل سيدي الشيخ محمد بن فتح الله الجهيري بدمشق الشام ..."

Al-Makassarī's journey did not stop in Damascus; it continued to Ottoman Empire's Anatolia;³⁷ this was where he came across long established educational institutions such as *Dār al-'Ilm*³⁸ that were around since 1193. Many Muslim personalities passed through this city during the middle of the 13th Century; one of the most important ones among them was Ibn 'Arabī (d.1240). Ibn 'Arabī, who conducted a study trip to Malatya, Sivas, and Konya; in each of these cities, his teachings became the centre of attention; and they became part of the madrasah (Muslim school) curriculum. And through his student, Ṣaḍr al-Dīn al-Qunāwī (d.1274), Ibn 'Arabī made a huge impact in Anatolia.

Maulāna Jalāl al-Dīn al-Rūmī (d.1275) was also a significant Muslim figure who also roamed that region. He headed to Konya, where he settled and produced many works. While staying there, he wrote two works, Dīwān and Mathnawī. The last work was Rūmī's great monument work.³⁹ Now, the ṭarīqah Maulāwiyyah, it should be noted, was a ṭarīqah that referred to Rūmī's title, that is, Maulāna (that is, Muslim theologian/jurist). The Tarīqah Maulāwiyyah was, however, popularized by Maulāna Rūmī's son, Sulṭān al-Walad (d.

1312).⁴⁰ Though different from the other ṭuruq, al-Makassarī mentioned that he had ties with the ṭarīqah Maulāwīyyah. Unfortunately, al-Makassarī did not describe the genealogy of the Maulāwīyyah and from where it started. Al-Makassarī, it seems, obtained his qualifications to be associated with the Tarīqah Maulāwīyyah during his trip and stay in Anatolia. Referring to the Maulāwīyyah proclivity, Trimmingham wrote:

“The order remained centralized and was not subject to the splitting process which so typified the Khalwatīyyah, but this also meant that its influence was restricted to Turkey.”⁴¹

Anatolia, it seems, was the final city where al-Makassarī stationed himself and where he studied. The extant sources that described his travels after Anatolia did not elaborate on his journeys except that al-Makassarī returned to the Ḥaramayn. From there, he coordinated the Muslim congregation in the majlis al-‘ilm (Muslim scholar’s council) and this implied that al-Makassarī was the first Jawi’ scholar who succeeded to open a majlis in the Ḥaramayn.⁴²

Important to note is the fact that most boarding students, who studied with al-Makassarī in Ḥaramayn, originated from the Archipelago. They came to not only perform the pilgrimage, but they came to study under a notable shaykh from their region. Among those students, who were under al-Makassarī’s guidance and tutorship, were Abū al-Faṭḥ ‘Abd al-Baṣīr al-Darīr (known as Tuan Rappang), ‘Abd al-Ḥāmid Karaeng Karungrung,⁴³ and ‘Abd al-Qādir Karaeng Majeneng.

3.3 Third Phase: Dedication and Struggle

After al-Makassarī gained the title al-Tāj al-Khalwatī, he left Ḥaramayn to trek back to his home city in 1670.⁴⁴ Because of the political situation in Makassar, the authorities did not permit this and al-Makassarī thus changed course, travelling to the Kingdom of Banten, West Java. Sultan ‘Abd al-Fattāḥ - known as Sultan Ageng Tirtayasa - was the ruler of Banten (1651-1683), he was al-Makassarī’s old friend; he had met when he stopped over in Banten before he headed for the Arabian Peninsula.

It appears that the ruler of Banten had a deep respect for his friend. Al-Makassarī, who was a descendent of Makassar nobles, was requested to stay and devote himself to the Kingdom of Banten. Al-Makassarī was then appointed as the Kingdom’s advisor (qadī malik al-‘aḍl or opperpriester or hooggenpriester according to Dutch sources). And from then onwards, the family ties became tightly bound when the Sultan betrothed his daughter to al-Makassarī.⁴⁵

Al-Makassarī, who had spent about twenty-six years away and had since become the son-in-law to Sultan Ageng Tirtayasa, bore a mandate as the royal mufṭī; in addition, he was also given permission by the Sultan to open a study centre for intellectual and spiritual training and education. After a period, the institute attracted considerable interest from seekers of knowledge from various parts and territories of the Archipelago; many came from the Bugis-Makassar region.

The student boarders, who had studied under al-Makassarī in the Ḥaramayn, returned in large numbers to deepen their religious knowledge and the ṭarīqah’s teachings. There were many, who had fled, requesting the political protection of the Sultan of Banten; this was soon after the fall of the Kingdom of Makassar during 1669. This Kingdom was ruled by Sulṭān Ḥasan al-Dīn with the support of the Dutch colonialists.⁴⁶

One matter, which needs to be noted, is that al-Makassarī's presence in the Sultanate of Banten made a very important contribution to the development and advancement of Muslim education in the kingdom. Through al-Makassarī's contributions, Banten's reputation was respected, and it was the largest Muslim kingdom in Java during that period. Unfortunately, the Kingdom of Banten did not last long; and as its position weakened, the Dutch colonialists, who had emasculated the Kingdom of Makassar, extended its rule by not only taking advantage of the Makassar Sea trade route but also "The Banten Sea trade route (that) must be controlled!" Since then, the Dutch used political strategies that included divide et impera (divide and conquer) to bring Makassar to its knees; and they did the same when they fought against the Kingdom of Banten where al-Makassarī was stationed.

Sultan Haji, who was the Prince of Banten, returned from his pilgrimage and came under the influence of Dutch. In 1680, the situation became dire for the Bantanese since Sultan Haji, the ruler's eldest son, opted to support the Dutch against his father Sultan Ageng Tirtayasa; this resulted in a protracted civil war. Sultan Ageng Tirtayasa was then unceremoniously brought down by Sultan Haji; Sultan Ageng with the aid of Prince Poerbaya and al-Makassarī stood up in opposition. The Dutch, who supported Sultan Haji, successfully countered the royal troops of Sultan Ageng; and in the end, he and his troops were forced to surrender. The Dutch apprehended Sultan Ageng and took him to Jakarta where he drew his final breath in 1692.

The surrender of Sultan Ageng Tirtayasa to Sultan Haji and the Dutch, in fact did not extinguish the flame and spirit of the struggle that was led by al-Makassarī. Together with his troop of four thousand men who were supported by about one thousand students, al-Makassarī decided to conduct 'guerrilla' warfare. About two years thereafter, he and his troops arrived at Karang, West Java; this was a kampung where the 'ālim ([religious] scholar), Shaykh 'Abd al-Muḥy resided. 'Abd al-Muḥy, who was known by the Dutch as Hajee Karang, was the favourite student of 'Abd al-Ra'ūf al-Singkili, al-Makassarī's colleague in the Haramayn. He had been delegated by al-Singkili to go to Java to spread ṭarīqah Shaḥṭāriyyah; and he chose the area of Karang as a base where he could establish a pesantrien.⁴⁷

Shaykh 'Abd al-Muḥy admired al-Makassarī and thus gave him protection as well as his forces. The Dutch devised a stratagem to capture Asma, al-Makassarī's daughter, and use her as bait to lure al-Makassarī out of hiding at Karang. With the capture of his daughter, al-Makassarī then surrendered himself on 14 December 1683.⁴⁸ He was first exiled to Ceylon on 12 September 1684, and then to Cabo de Goede Hoop where he died in 1699 at age of 73 years.⁴⁹

4. Al-Makassarī's Works

Among western scholars who deserve appreciation for their pioneering studies on al-Makassarī is B. F. Matthes.⁵⁰ Since the publishing of Boegineese en Makassaarsche Legenden in 1885,⁵¹ many scholars followed studying al-Makassarī. A comprehensive study of al-Makassarī's works appeared in P. Voorhoeve's Handlist of Arabic Manuscripts in 1957. The Handlist contained much of al-Makassarī's works which were previously unknown; these were considered to have been lost.⁵² Efforts of scholars to bring al-Makassarī's works to the surface then intensified. Among those who did that was Tujimah; the latter published Syekh Yusuf Makassar: Riwayat dan Ajaranya. Tujimah and herein he provided the following list of al-Makassarī's works:⁵³

1. Al-Barakah al-Saylāniyyah min al-Futūḥāt al-Rabbāniyyah;
2. Bidāyat al-Mubtadī;
3. Al-Fawā'ih al-Yusūfiyyah fī Bayān Taḥqīq al-Ṣūfiyyah;
4. Hāshiyah fī Kitāb al-Anbah fī I'rāb Lā Ilāh Illā Allāh;
5. Kayfiyyat al-Nafy wa al-Ithbāt bi al-Hadīth al-Qudsī;
6. Maṭālib al-Sālikin li man Qaṣada Rabb al-'Ālamīn;
7. Al-Nafḥah al-Saylāniyyah fī al-Minḥah al-Rahmāniyyah;
8. Qurrat al-'Ayn;
9. Sirr al-Asrār;
10. Sūrah;
11. Tāj al-Asrār fī Taḥqīq Mashārib al-'Ārifīn min Ahl al-Istibsār;
12. Zubdat al-Asrār fī Taḥqīq Ba'd Mashārib al-Akhyār;
13. Faṭḥ Kayfiyyat al-Dhikr;
14. Daf' al-Balā';
15. Hādhīhī Fawā'id Lāzimah, Dhikr Lā Ilāh Illā Allāh;
16. Muqaddimat al-Fawā'id al-Lafī mā lā Buddha min al-'Aqā'id;
17. Taḥṣīl al-'Ināyah wa al-Hidāyah;
18. Risālah fī Ghāyat al-Ikhtiṣār wa Nihāyat al-IntiZār;
19. Tuḥfat al-Amr fī Faḍīlat al-Dhikr;
20. Tuḥfat al-Abrār li Ahl al-Asrār; and
21. Al-Waṣiyyah al-Munjiyyah.

From the Daengta Kali-a ri Gowa (MS DKG) collection, Tujimah added these works:⁵⁴

1. Ḥabl al-Warīd li Sa'ādat al-Murīd;
2. Al-Futūḥāt al-Rabbāniyyah;
3. Tuḥfat al-Labīb bi Liqā al-Ḥabīb;
4. Risālah ilā Sulṭān al-Wazir Karaeng Karungrung; and
5. Saffinat al-Nujāh al-Mustafādah 'an al-Mashā'ikh wa al-Nuqāt.

To complement this, A. Syamsul Bahri A. Galigo⁵⁵ included the following eight works:

1. Shurūṭ al-'Ārif al-Muḥaqqiq;
2. Tartīb al-Dhikr;
3. Kayfiyyat al-Dhikr;⁵⁶
4. Tanbīh al-Mashi;⁵⁷
5. Mir'at al-Muḥaqqiqīn;
6. Faṭḥ al-Rahmān bi Sharḥ Risālat al-Walī Raslān;
7. Asrār al-Salāh; and
8. Tuḥfat al-Ṭālib al-Mubtadī wa Minḥat al-Sālik al-Muhtadī.

These works, cited above, were written by al-Makassarī in Arabic. There are two more Arabic works that experts ascribed to him; these are: (1) Talkhīs al-Ma'ārif min Adhwāq al-'Awārif;⁵⁸ and (2) al-Risālah al-Naqshabandiyyah.⁵⁹ Apart from these works in Arabic, al-Makassarī also wrote in his regional languages such as Bugis and Melayu (Jawi).

In the Indonesian National Library Bugis Manuscript collection, there are several earlier manuscripts that use the inscription in their introduction: “Hādhā Kitāb Shaykh Yūsuf al-Tāj al-Khalwatī” (“This book was written by Yūsuf al-Tāj al-Khalwatī”).⁶⁰ In addition, the manuscript’s prologue that was written in Buginese stated the following: “Makkedai Shaikh Yūsuf...” (“Shaikh Yūsuf says...”)”⁶¹

In the same collection we come across the name of al-Makassarī’s teacher, Ibrāhīm al-Kurānī. For example, it reads on page 241: “Makkedai Saehe’e To Tongeng-Tongengnge Nappejeppu ri Allāh Ta’āla Koritu Shaikh Ibrāhīm Ana’na Ḥasan To Kurānī Wanuanna, To Madina Toi...” (“Shaikh al-‘Ārif bi Allāh Ibrāhīm Ḥasan says the name of his father is Kurānī, Madinah is his place of birth...”)”⁶²

Al-Makassarī’s Melayu penned manuscripts are listed in the Maleische Handsripten collection (Malay manuscript collection); it is numbered 49 in the Batavian Society library (and since shifted to the Republic of Indonesian National Library) collection. In this collection, the manuscript on pages 45–63 has been attributed to al-Makassarī. In the manuscript’s prologue, the following sentence affirms that: “... this is a paper from our Shaykh Mashā’ikh’s writings, a friend of Allah, a true teacher, Shaykh Yūsuf, Maqtasi his homeland” (“... maka inilah Risalah dari pada karangan Shaikh Mashā’ikh kami, walī Allāh, lagi kāmīl mukammīl, Shaikh Yūsuf, Maqtasi negerinya.”).⁶³

5. Conclusion

In conclusion, it may be argued that al-Makassarī was an outstanding ‘alim. Al-Makassarī belongs to a handful of scholars who waged a valiant struggle against the VOC during the 17th century. And since he authored many significant manuscripts during the time, he helped to educate the Muslim communities in the Archipelago as well as those that were in exile; so, he merits a place in among those who made similar contributions. More importantly, he deserves to be among the long list of major Muslim figures in that region and in the Muslim world.

Like Ḥamzah Fansūrī and Nūr al-Dīn al-Rānīrī, Al-Makassarī was a prominent personality that was a noteworthy representative from the Archipelago and someone who acted as an important agent in Muslim history. Described differently: Al-Makassarī was and remains a jewel from Makassar; he was someone whose light continues to shine radiantly for all of time; and for the Southeast Asian communities as well as Ceylon and the Cape where he was in exile, he is an exemplary figure.

6. Bibliography

6.1 Manuscripts

al-Makassarī, Syeikh Yusuf. Hadiyyat al-Khiḍr dalam Majmū’ah min Mu’allaḡāt al-Syeikh Yūsuf al-Tāj al-Khalwatī, MS DKG.

al-Makassarī. Hāshiyah fī Kitāb al-Anbā’ fī I’rāb Lā Ilāha Illā Allāh dalam MS. Jakarta, PNRI. NA-101.

al-Makassarī. Risālah ilā al-Sulṡān al-Wazīr Karaeng Karungrung dalam Majmū’ah min Mu’allaḡāt al-Syeikh Yūsuf al-Tāj al-Khalwatī, MS DKG.

- al-Makassarī. Maḥālib al-Sālikīn li man Qasada Rabb al-‘Ālamīn dalam MS. Jakarta, PNRI. NA-101.
- al-Makassarī. Tuḥfat al-Ṭālib al-Mubtadī wa Minḥat al-Sālik al-Muhtadī dalam MS Jakarta, PNRI. NA-45.
- al-Makassarī. Kayfiyyat al-Manfiy wa al-Itsbāt dalam MS Jakarta, PNRI. NA-108, 101.
- al-Makassarī. Fath al-Raḥmān bi Sharḥ Riṣālat al-Walī Raslān dalam MS Jakarta, PNRI. NA-108.
- al-Makassarī. Riṣālah fī Ghāyat al-Ikhtiṣār wa Nihāyat al-Inzār dalam MS Jakarta, PNRI. NA-108.
- al-Makassarī. al-A‘yān al-Tsābitah dalam MS Jakarta, PNRI. NA-108.
- al-Makassarī. Kayfiyyat al-Manfiy wa al-Itsbāt bi Ḥadīts al-Qudsī dalam MS Jakarta, PNRI. NA-108.
- al-Makassarī. Bidāyat al-Mubtadī dalam MS Jakarta, PNRI. NA-108.
- al-Makassarī. “Tuḥfat al-Abrār li Ahl al-Asrār” dalam MS Jakarta, PNRI. NA-101.
- al-Makassarī. Mir‘at al-Muḥaqqiqīn dalam MS Jakarta, PNRI., NA-101.
- al-Makassarī. Safīnat al-Nujāh al-Mustafādah ‘an al-Mashā’ih al-Nuqāt dalam Majmū‘ah min Mu‘allaḥāt al-Syeikh Yūsuf al-Tāj al-Khalwatī, MS DKG
- al-Makassarī. Taḥṣīl al-‘Ināyah wa al-Hidāyah dalam MS. Jakarta, PNRI. NA-108.
- al-Makassarī. Qawā‘id al-Aqā‘id, dalam MS. Jakarta, PNRI. VT-23, 104-110.
- al-Makassarī. Tauḥīd al-Khālīṣ dalam MS. Jakarta, PNRI. VT-23, 241.
- al-Makassarī. Tanbīh al-Māshī dalam MS. Jakarta, PNRI. NA-101, 140.

6.2 Books, Dissertations, Theses, and Articles

- Abdullah, Hawas. 1980. Perkembangan Ilmu Tasawwuf dan Tokoh-Tokohnya di Nusantara. Surabaya: al-Ikhlās.
- Abu Hāmid. 1994. Syekh Yusuf Makassar: Seorang Sufi dan Pejuang. Jakarta: Yayasan Obor Indonesia.
- al-Ahmadi, Abdul Rahman. 1981. “Sejarah Hubungan Kelantan/Patani dengan Sulawesi Selatan,” Makalah yang dipresentasikan di Diplome d’Etudes Approfondies, Paris: Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales.
- al-‘Ajamī, Ḥasan. 1980. Ihdā al-Laṭāif min Akhbār al-Tā’if, (Ed. Yaḥyā Maḥmūd al-Sa‘atī). Ṭā’if: Dār al-Thāqif.

- Al-Attas, Syed Muhammad Naquib. 1986. A Commentary on the Hujjat al-Şiddiq of Nūr al-Dīn al-Rānīrī. Kuala Lumpur: Ministry of Culture and Sports.
- Al-Attas, Syed Muhammad Naquib. 1966. Rānīrī and the Wujūdiyyah of 17th Centuri Aceh. Singapore: Malaysian Printers Limited.
- Azra, Azyumardi. 1998. Jaringan Ulama Timur Tengah dan Kepulauan Nusantara Abad XVII dan XVIII. Bandung: Penerbit Mizan.
- Basang, Djiron. 1981. Riwayat Syekh Yusuf dan Kisah I Makkutaknang dengan I Manuntungi. Jakarta: DEPDIKBUD RI.
- al-Burhān al-Nufūrī, Muḥammad Faḍl al-Allāh ‘Isā al-Şindī. “al-Tuḥfah al-Mursalāh ilā al-Nabī” dalam MS. Jakarta, PNRI, NA-108.
- Cawidu, H. Harifuddin “Dimensi Moral dalam Ajaran-ajaran Syekh Yusuf Taj al-Khalwaty Al-Makassari” makalah yang dipresentasikan dalam Seminar Dalam Rangka Memperingati 300 Tahun Pendaratan Syekh Yusuf di Afrika Selatan, UNHAS: Ujung Pandang, Sulawesi Selatan, 2 April, 1994.
- Dangor, Suleman Essop. 1982. Shaykh Yusuf. Durban: Iqra’ Research Committee.
- Dangor, Suleman Essop. 1994. “In the Footsteps of the Companions: Shaykh Yusuf of Makassar (1626-1699)” in Pages from Cape Muslim History, (Ed. Yusuf da Costa & Achmat Davids). Pietermaritzburg: Shuter and Shooter, Ltd.
- Darley-Doran, R. E. 1995. “Saldjūkids.” In Encyclopedia of Islam, Leiden: E.J. Brill. VIII: 936-978. new ed.
- Farid, Zainal Abidin. 1994. “Asal Usul Sekh Yusuf Tajul Khalwati dan Penyebaran Ajarannya di Daerah Sulawesi Selatan,” makalah yang dipresentasikan dalam Seminar Dalam Rangka Memperingati 300 Tahun Pendaratan Syekh Yusuf di Afrika Selatan. Ujung Pandang, Sulawesi Selatan: UNHAS, 2 April 1994.
- Galigo, A. Syamsul Bahri A. 1998. Syekh Yusuf Makassar dan Pemikiran Tasawwufnya: Suatu Kajian Risalah al-Nafhah al-Saylaniyyah. Unpublished Ph.D. University Kebangsaan Malaysia Dissertation. Bangi: UKM.
- al-Ḥakīm, Su‘ād. 1981. al-Mu‘jam al-Şūfi: al-Ḥikmah fī Ḥudūd al-Kalimah. Beyrut: Dandarāh.
- Hamka. 1981. Dari Perbendaharaan Lama. Kuala Lumpur: Penerbit Pustaka Antara.
- Harvey, Barbara Sillars. 1974. Tradition, Islam and Rebellion: South Sulawesi 1950-1965. Unpublished Ph.D. Dissertation Graduate School of Cornell University.
- Heer, Nicholas. 1979. The Precious Pearl: al-Jāmi’s al-Durrah al-Fākhīrah. Albany: State University of New York Press.

- Jones, Russel. 1979. "Ten Conversion Myths from Indonesia." In Conversion to Islam (Ed. Nehmia Levtzion). New York: Holmes and Meier Publisher.
- Keraan, Mustapha M. 1994. Selected Writings of Shaykh Yusuf al-Khalwati. Unpublished Baccalaureus Honours Thesis University of the Western Cape (UWC). Bellville: UWC.
- Lubis, Nabilah. 1996. Syekh Yusuf al-Makassarī: Menyingkap Intisari Segala Rahasia. Bandung: Penerbit Mizan.
- Makdisi, George. 1981. The Rise of Colleges: Institution of Learning in Islam and the West. Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press.
- Mattata, Moh. Sanusi Daeng. 1967 Luwu dalam Revolusi. Makassar Mimeo.
- Matthes, Benjamin Frederik. 1885. "Boegineesche en Makassaarsche Legendes." In Bijdragen Tot de Taal, Land-en Volkenkunde, 34: 431-494.
- Mattulada, H. A. 1998. Sejarah, Masyarakat dan Kebudayaan Sulawesi Selatan. Ujung Pandang: Hasanuddin University Press.
- Noorduyn, Jacobus. 1965. "Origins of South Celebes Historical Writings," in An Introduction to Indonesian Historiography (Ed. Soedjatmoko). Ithaca, New York: Cornell University Press.
- Noorduyn, Jacobus. 1956. "De Islamisering van Makassar." In Bijdragen Tot de Taal, Land-en Volkenkunde. 112(3): 247-266.
- Pelras, Christian. 1993. "Religion, Tradition and the Dynamics of Islamization in South Sulawesi." In Archipel, 57: 133-154, April.
- Shihab, Alwi. 2001. Islam Sufistik: Islam Pertama dan Pengaruhnya Hingga Kini di Indonesia. Bandung: Mizan.
- Trimingham, John S. 1971. The Sufi Orders in Islam. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Tudjimah, C. S. 1997. Syekh Yusuf Makassar: Riwayat dan Ajarannya. Jakarta: Penerbit Universitas Indonesia.
- Patunru, Abd Razak Daeng. 1993. Sejarah Gowa. Ujung Pandang: Yayasan Kebudayaan Sulawesi Selatan.
- Van Bruinessen, Martin, 1990. "Mencari Ilmu dan Pahala di Tanah Suci: Orang Nusantara Naik Haji." In Ulumul Qur'an II (5): 42-49.
- Voorhoeve, Petrus. 1957. Handlist of Arabic Manuscripts in the Library of the University of Leiden and other Collections in Netherlands. Leiden: Leiden University Press.

Endnotes

- ¹ Tunangkaklopi is a descendant of Tumanurung, the first king of the Kingdom of Makassar. See Abu Ḥamid, 1994. Syekh Yusuf Makassar: Seorang Sufi dan Pejuang (Jakarta: Yayasan Obor Indonesia) p.7. Henceforth referred to as Sufi dan Pejuang. Compare with B. S. Harvey. 1974. Tradition, Islam, and Rebellion: South Sulawesi 1950-1965 (PhD dissertation, Graduate School of Cornell University), p.17. Henceforth, referenced as South Sulawesi 1950-1965.
- ² This situation of harmony is given expression by the Makassar community in the sentence: Rua Karaeng na Se're Āta meaning: "Two kings governing one nation". Sufi dan Pejuang, pp. 7–10. Abd Razak Daeng Patunru. 1993. Sejarah Gowa (Ujung Pandang: Yayasan Kebudayaan Sulawesi Selatan), pp. 8–9. Henceforth, referred to as Sejarah Gowa.
- ³ Sources state that Islam arrived in the region in 1480 for two reasons: first, in Portuguese records, from those who had visited Makassar in 1542 state that the area had been visited by Muslim traders who had come from Patani, Pahang, and Ujung Tanah; they had taken up residence and stayed in the area for about 60 years. Second, Sayyid Ḥusayn Jamād al-Kubrā left Kelantan, Malaysia, in 1448 for Java; after residing there for about four years, he chose Wajo, South Sulawesi, as his final resting place. He died there in 1453. Abdul Rahman al-Ahmadi explains this in detail in 'The History of the Relationship of Kelantan/Patani'; this a paper presented at the Diplome d'Etudes Approfondies, Ecole des Hautes Etudes et Sciences Sociales, Paris, 1981, pp. 4–5. Compare with C. Pelras. 1993. "Religion, Tradition and the Dynamics of Islamization in South Sulawesi." In Archipel, 57 (April) pp. 135–6. Hereafter referred to as Islamization in South Sulawesi.
- ⁴ According to Valentijn, when Baabullah, the Sultan of Ternate, visited Makassar on a matter affecting the King of Gowa, Bonto Lankasa, he was successful in gaining the King of Gowa's attention making him a mu'allaf (convert), which caused Bonto Lankasa to offer protection to the Malay Muslim community living in the Kingdom of Gowa. See Islamization in South Sulawesi, p. 137.
- ⁵ Sejarah Gowa, p. 16.
- ⁶ See Moh. Sanusi Daeng Mattata. 1967. Luwu dalam Revolusi (Makassar: Mimeo), pp. 53–5.
- ⁷ According to sources, the arrival of Dato' ri Bandang to the Kingdom of Makassar to Islam proselytization was not the first time, because 1576, he had done something similar. And his arrival this time, that is at the end of the 16th century, he was accompanied by two Dato' (holders of high rank): Dato' ri Pattimang and Dato' ri Tiro. See Islamization in South Sulawesi, p.144. Compare it to H. A. Mattulada. 1998. Sejarah, Masyarakat dan Kebudayaan Sulawesi Selatan (Ujung Pandang: Hasanuddin University Press), p.154. Henceforth, referred to as Sulawesi Selatan.
- ⁸ Islamization in South Sulawesi, p. 134.
- ⁹ La Sangaji in Lontara Sukkuna Wajo takes a dialogue between La Mungkacek to Uddamang, the King of Wajo (1570–1610) with I Malingkaang Daeng Nyonrik, the King of Tallo' and the Prime Minister of Gowa Kingdom concerning the meaning contained in "Dewata Seuwuae." King Wajo explained: "nariaseng Dewata nasaba To Pawinru'i, To Pabare'-bare'-i, To Palinge'-linge'-i" means: "being called God is because He is the Creator, the Determiner of Destination, and the Giver of Life and Death." This explanation showed that the King of Wajo had knowledge of Islam; and perhaps this knowledge was possibly influenced by Sayyid Husain Jamād al-Kubrā's teachings (known to be a Buginese such as Sehetta To Sora=Shaikh kita who lived in di Sora, Wajo); a person who came to Wajo with the aim to proselytize. See Zainal Abidin Farid, "Asal Usul Sekh Yusuf Tajul Khalwati dan Penyebaran Ajarannya di Daerah Sulawesi Selatan;" a paper presented at the Seminar Dalam Rangka Memperingati 300 Tahun Pendaratan Syekh Yusuf di Afrika Selatan, UNHAS, Ujung Pandang, South Sulawesi, 2 April, 1994, p. 25. See Islamization in South Sulawesi, pp. 135–6.
- ¹⁰ Sulawesi Selatan, pp. 150–51. Regarding the history of the conversion of Sulṭān 'Alā al-Dīn kedalam Islam, see B. F. Matthes, "Boeagineesche en Makassaarsche Legendes," in Bijdragen Tot de Taal, Land-en Volkenkunde, 34 (1885): pp. 446–49. Hereafter, it is called Makassaarsche Legendes. Also see Russel Jones, "Ten Conversion Myths from Indonesia," in Conversion to Islam, ed. Nehemia Levtzion (New York: Holmes and Meier Publisher, 1979), pp. 149–50.
- ¹¹ Lihat J. Noorduy. 1965. "Origins of South Celebes Historical Writings," in An Introduction to Indonesian

Historiography, ed. Soedjatmoko (Ithaca, New York: Cornell University Press), pp. 145-6.

¹² Sulawesi Selatan 1950-1965, 152-3; Islamization in South Sulawesi, pp. 134-5.

¹³ See passim J. Noorduyn, "De Islamisering van Makassar," in Bijdragen Tot de Taal, Land-en Volkenkunde, 62 (1956): pp. 247-66; see South Sulawesi 1950-1965, pp. 36-7; Sulawesi Selatan, p. 153; Islamization in South Sulawesi, pp. 134-5; Sejarah Gowa, p. 153; see Sufi dan Pejuang, pp. 75-77.

¹⁴ The birth of al-Makassarī has been much covered in legends and myths. Some in the community believe that al-Makassarī is the son of al-Khidr (Allah's preacher, who according to Muslim tradition, was blessed with a long life); others believe that his father was Gallarang Monconglo'e (known after his conversion as 'Abd Allah al-Khidr) who had the same mother as the King of Gowa XIV, Sultān 'Alā al-Dīn I Mangarai Daeng Manrabia, whereas his mother was Aminah binti (daughter of) Dampang Ko'mara, a noble from the Kingdom of Tallo.

Regardless, al-Makassarī provided a family tree and stated that his father was 'Abd Allah (without the term: 'al-Khidr'). See al-Makassarī, Hāshiyah fī Kitāb al-Anbā' fī l'rāb Lā Ilāha Illā Allāh, MS. Jakarta, National Library,

NA-101. See passim Sufi dan Pejuang, pp. 85-6, 79-85; A. Syamsul Bahri A. Galigo, Syekh Yusuf Makassar dan Pemikiran Tasawwufnya: Suatu Kajian Risalah al-Nafhah al-Saylāniyyah, (Ph.D. dissertation, University Kebangsaan Malaysia, 1998), p. 4. Hereafter called Yusuf Makassar.

¹⁵ Sufi dan Pejuang, pp. 86-7; Azyumardi Azra, Jaringan Ulama Timur Tengah dan Kepulauan Nusantara Abad

XVII dan XVIII (Bandung: Penerbit Mizan, 1998), 212-3. Henceforth referred to as Jaringan Ulama.

¹⁶ Syed Muhammad Naquib al-Attas, A Commentary on the Hujjat al-Šiddiq of Nūr al-Dīn al-Rānīrī (Kuala Lumpur: The Ministry of Culture, Youth and Sports, 1986), 5. Henceforth referred to as Commentary.

¹⁷ Al-Makassarī "Safīnat al-Nujāh al-Mustafādh 'an al-Mashā'ih al-Nuqāt" in Majmū'ah min Mu'allafāt al-Shaikh Yūsuf al-Tāj al-Khalwātī, MS DKG, 131-2. Henceforth, abbreviated as Safīnat al-Nujāh. It needs to be noted that Majmū'ah, which originated from Daengta Kali-a ri Gowa ini, was handed to Hamka, the Directorate of History and Ancient Times (Direktorat Sejarah dan Purbakala) in 1956. This was part of Tudjimah's responsibilities, and the sponsor Koninklijk Instituut voor Taal-Land-en Volkekunde Leiden, the Netherlands; from this, a transcription of Majmū'ah was made. Hereafter, Majmū'ah is abbreviated as MS DKG.

¹⁸ Safīnat al-Nujāh, pp.131-33. Parts of this reference was illegible; those named, for example, listed from numbers 9 to 23 were unclear; hence, al-Rānīrī's genealogy in Jawāhr al-'Ulūm fī Kashf al-Ma'lūm as quoted and explained by al-Attas in Commentary, pp.14-15.

¹⁹ Bā Saybān was born in India, and after he had spent some time on a rihlah ilmiyyah (an educational journey) in the Muslim heartlands such as the Arabian Peninsula, he returned to his home town, Bġjāpūr where he himself was initiated into the tariqah al-Rifā'iyyah by Sayyid Muḥammad al-'Aydārūs (known as ṣāhib Sūrāt or Master of Sūrāt). For details, see S. M. N. al-Attas, Rānīrī and the Wujūdīyyah of 17th Century Aceh (Singapore: Malaysian Printers Limited, 1966), p. 13; Jaringan Ulama, p.214. Al-Makassarī mentions the tariqah al-Rifā'iyyah genealogy, which he had received in Safīnat al-Nujāh, p.131.

²⁰ Commentary, 4; Yusuf Makassar, 10.

²¹ See al-Makassarī, "al-Nafhah al-Saylāniyyah fī al-Minḥ al-Rahmāniyyah" in Yusuf Makassar, 25; Safīnat al-Nujāh, p. 134; Jaringan Ulama, p.215.

²² See Alwi Shihab. 2001. Islam Sufistik: Islam Pertama dan Pengaruhnya Hingga Kini di Indonesia, (Bandung: Mizan), p.180 and p.186. Henceforth called Islam Sufistik.

²³ Safīnat al-Nujāh, p.137; see Tudjimah. 1997. Syekh Yusuf Makassar: Riwayat dan Ajarannya (Jakarta: Penerbit Universitas Indonesia), p.17. Henceforth referred to as Riwayat Syekh Yusuf. Tariqah 'Alawīyyah is the oldest tariqah in the Archipelago [Malay-Indonesia] region. Its pioneer was Imam Aḥmad bin Isa al-Muhajir, one of the Wali Songo (Nine Muslim Preachers who spread Islam in the Archipelago) personages. This tariqah requires one to wear special clothing; it does, however, not determine a particular shaykh. In practice, tariqah 'Alawīyyah is just a rawatib (additional but not obligatory) reading which has been passed down through the generations since the time of Rasulullah and his companions; see Islam Sufistik, p.192.

²⁴ al-Singkili's biography is discussed in detail in Jaringan Ulama, pp.189-211.

²⁵ Jaringan Ulama, p.209.

²⁶ It is strongly suspected, that under the guidance of al-Qushāshī, al-Makassarī was di-bay'at (his oath of loyalty to Islam was made in the tariqah Chishtī, Suhrawardī and Madarī. Because he followed his teacher's practices, Šibghat Allāh, who conducted the swearing of loyalty of his students not just in one tariqah, but in several tariqahs with which he was associated; it is even likely that al-Qushāshī influenced al-Makassarī to belong to these. For the al-Qushāshī network and its role in activities for disseminating knowledge in Haramayn, see the details in Azyumardi, Jaringan Ulama, pp. 84–6, and p. 89.

²⁷ Irāhim al-Kurānī was an important figure who was given the title hujjat al-sūfiyyah. He was known as a reformist in the 17th century AD (11th century H.). See Jaringan Ulama, pp.90–1.

²⁸ Hasan al-'Ajāmī was an expert in fiqh, ḥadīth and history. He was a Sūfī and held the title: Abū al-Asrār because of his work Risālah al-'Ajāmī fī al-Turuq. For a comprehensive biography see Hasan al-'Ajāmī. 1980. Ihdā al-Laṭā'if min Akhbār al-Ṭā'if, ed. Yahyā Maḥmūd al-Sa'atī (Ṭā'if: Dār al-Thāqif), pp.9–24; Jaringan Ulama, pp.100–101. One of amalah wirid (in devotions required recitation of parts of the Alquran) (plural 'awrād) was received by al-Makassarī through the path of Ḥasan al-'Ajāmī's genealogy, al-Musbba 'āt al-'Ashar. This wiridan

(two litanies) was performed by the followers of tariqah Khalwatiyyah, in particular tariqah Khalwatiyyah al-Yusūfiyyah in South Sulawesi to the present time. The genealogy of the wiridan was found by al-Makassarī, "Hadiyyat al-Khiḍr" in MS DKG, 18–22.

²⁹ After the success of al-Lāhūrī's guidance, al-Makassarī compiled a manuscript titled Maṭālib al-Sālikīn li man Qasada Rabb al-'Ālamīn, MS Jakarta, National Library, NA-101. This work was dedicated to his teacher, al-Lāhūrī and discussed by Nabilah Lubis. 1996. Syekh Yusuf al-Makassarī: Menyingkap Intisari Segala Rahasia (Bandung: Penerbit Mizan), p.36. Hereafter referred to as Menyingkap Intisari; see also Yusuf Makassar p.12.

³⁰ Yusuf Makassar, p.71. Compare with Jaringan Ulama, pp.216–217.

³¹ In MS DKG, al-Makassarī writes of the genealogy of the receiving of the tariqah Naqshabandiyyah authority to teach, Shaṭṭāriyyah, Bā 'Alawiyah. See also, in this order, the following: pp.134–135, 135–137, and p.93.

³² What is stated first and second is the glorious work of Nur al-Dīn 'Abd Rahman al-Jāmī. Whereas the last is the work of 'Ad al-Gafur al-Lari. For more details on these works see Nicholas Heer. 1979. The Precious Pearl: al-Jāmī's al-Durrah al-Fākhirah (Albany: State University of New York Press), p.15. See Nūr al-Dīn al-Jāmī, 1980. al-Durrah al-Fākhirah, ed. Nicholas Heer (Tehran: Tehran University Press), p.17. For the al-Jāmī's Risālah fī al-Wujūd edition; and see Nicholas Heer. 1979. "al-Jāmī's Treatise on Existence," in Islamic Philosophical Theology, ed. Parviz Morewedge (Albany: State University of New York Press).

³³ Jaringan Ulama, p.198.

³⁴ See Sufi dan Pejuang, p.93; Yusuf Makassar, p.71; and Jaringan Ulama, p.218.

³⁵ See Safinat al-Nujāh, p.100.

³⁶ Safinat al-Nujāh, p.80.

³⁷ Djiron Basang. 1981. Riwayat Syekh Yusuf dan Kisah I Makkutaknang dengan I Manuntungi (Jakarta: DEPDIKBUD RI), p.149. See Hamka. 1981. Dari Perbendaharaan Lama (Kuala Lumpur: Penerbit Pustaka Antara), p.46; Jaringan Ulama, p.220; and, Yusuf Makassar, p.13.

³⁸ George Makdisi. 1981. The Rise of Colleges: Institution of Learning in Islam and the West (Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press), pp.9–35. The research focuses on the history of Penelitian intellectualism in Persia, Iraq and Turkey, also conducted by R. E. Darley Doran. 1995. "Saldjūkids" in Encyclopedia of Islam, new ed.8: pp.950–53. See J. S. Trimmingham, 1971. The Sufi Orders in Islam (New York: Oxford University Press), pp.31–60. Hereafter, referred to as Sufi Orders in Islam.

³⁹ Sufi Orders in Islam, 61.

⁴⁰ The source states that tariqah Mawlāwiyyah has a basis in Saldjūk. For a detailed discussion see Darley Doran, p.972.

⁴¹ Sufi Orders in Islam, p.62.

⁴² Sufi dan Pejuang, p.94. Research, which shows the role of 'Ulamā Jāwī (Malay theologians) in Haramayn in transferring knowledge, has been undertaken by Martin van Bruinessen. 1990. "Mencari Ilmu dan Pahala di Tanah Suci: Orang Nusantara Naik Haji," in Ulumul Qur'an 5:42–49. Henceforth, referred to as Mencari Ilmu.

⁴³ Abd al-Hāmid Karaeng Karungrung was the Prime Minister of Gowa Kingdom. For al-Makassarī's relationship with Karaeng Karungrung, see al-Makassarī, "Risālah ilā al-Sultān al-Wazīr Karaeng Karungrung" in MS DKG, pp.116–24.

⁴⁴ Mencari Ilmu, p.45.

⁴⁵ Jaringan Ulama, p.223. Bandingkan Sufi dan Pejuang, p.97.

⁴⁶ See Sufi dan Pejuang, p.98.

⁴⁷ Al-Makassarī dedicated the writing especially to 'Abd al-Muḥy who requested it to explain the words ma'rifah

(Knowledge of Allah) and qalb (origin of intentional activities). See al-Makassarī's work, untitled, MS Jakarta, National Library, NA-101, pp.63–8. See Jaringan Ulama, p.223; Menyingkap Intisari, pp.26–27. Despite this, the work was in the end given the title Shurūṭ al-'Arif al-Muhaqqiq. For a detailed account of this work, see Sufi dan Pejuang, p.145; Menyingkap Intisari, p.64; and, Yusuf Makassar, p.42.

⁴⁸ See Sufi dan Pejuang, p.106, Menyingkap Intisari, p.27.

⁴⁹ For al-Makassarī's role and struggle in the spread of Islam and proselytization in Ceylon and South Africa, see a detailed account in Suleman Essop Dangor. 1982. Shaykh Yusuf (Durban: Iqra' Research Committee), pp.25–61. Henceforth, abbreviated to Shaykh Yusuf; Suleman Essop Dangor. 1994. "In the Footsteps of the Companions:

Shaykh Yusuf of Makassar (1626–1699)" in Pages from Cape Muslim History, ed. Yusuf da Costa and Achmat Davids (Pietermaritzburg: Shuter and Shooter, Ltd.) pp.21–23; Sufi dan Pejuang, pp.106–26; and Jaringan Ulama, pp.220–32.

⁵⁰ According to Abu Hāmid, Matthes is a Dutch scholar who had travelled to Makassar in 1884. He lived in Makassar for some time studying the Bugis and Makassar languages. For a detailed account see Sufi dan Pejuang, pp.58–59.

⁵¹ See Makassaarsche Legenden, pp.446–53.

⁵² P. Voorhoeve. 1957. Handlist of Arabic Manuscripts in the Library of the University of Leiden and other Collections in Netherlands (Leiden: Leiden University Press), p.539

⁵³ Riwayat Syekh Yusuf, p.21.

⁵⁴ Riwayat Syekh Yusuf, p.111.

⁵⁵ Yusuf Makassar, pp.42–44. Compare with Sufi dan Pejuang, pp.145–6.

⁵⁶ Initially, the titles of both these works, numbers 2 and 3, were unknown. However, Abu Hamid, Nabilah Lubis, and A. Galigo identified, in order, as Tartīb al-Dhikr and Kayfiyyat al-Dhikr. See Sufi dan Pejuang, p.145; Menyingkap Intisari, p.64; dan, Yusuf Makassar, p.42.

⁵⁷ The full title is Tanbīh al-Māshī al-Mansūb ilā Tariq al-Qushāshī. The attribution to al-Makassarī is questionable, remembering that the name 'Abd al-Ra'ūf 'Alī al-Jāwī as the author is clearly stated at the end of the book. For further clarification see Tanbīh al-Māshī, MS. Jakarta, National Library, NA-101, p.140.

⁵⁸ MS. Jakarta, National Library, NA-101, pp.466–69. This work has been translated into English by Mustapha M. Keraan 1994. in "Selected Writings of Shaykh Yusuf al-Khalwati" (Baccalaureus Thesis, University of the Western Cape), pp.17–31.

⁵⁹ For further explanation on al-Makassarī's work see Hawas Abdullah. 1980. Perkembangan Ilmu Tasawwuf dan Tokoh-Tokohnya di Nusantara (Surabaya: al-Ikhlās), pp.66–67.

⁶⁰ See the untitled Manuscript: MS. Jakarta, National Library, VT-23, pp.194-204 and pp.251–260.

⁶¹ See in order Qayd al-Ma'rifah and Qawā'id al-Qawā'id, MS. Jakarta, National Library, VT-23, pp.104–110. Further on, in the same collection, see pp.244–251, untitled works with the sentence "Makkedai Shaikh Yusuf" ("Shaikh Yusuf says")

⁶² Tauhīd al-Khāliṣ, MS. Jakarta, National Library, VT-23, p.241.

⁶³ See Ilmu Nafas, MS. Jakarta, National Library, W-49. See Sufi dan Pejuang, p.147. In the collection of the Malay Manuscript Centre, Kuala Lumpur, the name al-Makassarī has been found in MS. 423, pp.106–123. For a detailed discussion see Yusuf Makassar, p.43.

CHAPTER THREE

Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari's Thinking: A Philosophical Construction¹

Mustari Mustafa

Abstract

Anyone who wishes to obtain a comprehensive view concerning Shaykh Yusuf's philosophical views should reflect on his epistemology and ontology. While the latter focuses on the Shaykh's standpoints that deals with how Muslims view God and the natural surroundings, the former gives attention to the Shaykh's (that is, a Muslim's notion regarding) the theory of knowledge. In this chapter, much of the focus will be on Ontology and a brief discussion concentrates on epistemology. Since Shaykh Yusuf's ideas are embedded in a Muslim perspective, this chapter juxtaposes the Shaykh's thoughts with those advocated by Hegel and Marx respectively; their philosophical viewpoints are used in this chapter to show how each one's thinking always references the thinker's philosophical landscape and convictions and to what degree they differ from the Muslim understanding.

Keywords: Shaykh Yusuf, Philosophy, Thoughts. Ontology, Epistemology

1. Introduction: From Science to Philosophy

Van Peursen² stated that previously science was identical to philosophy; this was a result its limitations that depended on the system of philosophy which was embraced. The development of philosophy itself had taken its existence, as a configuration, showing how "the tree of knowledge" had vigorously grown throwing out new branches. Each branch separated itself from its parent philosophy; thereafter, each developed on its own and followed its own methodologies.

Philosophies, known from previous times to the present, began to be developed or born in the ancient Greek period in 6 BC, with its mythological character; since then, it placed the foundations of experimentation in the history of human being's thinking. The ancient Greek period pushed the efforts of a human being to penetrate further into the world of phenomena; in other words, to know the existence of something single, fixed, eternal, behind what was varied, changing, relative.

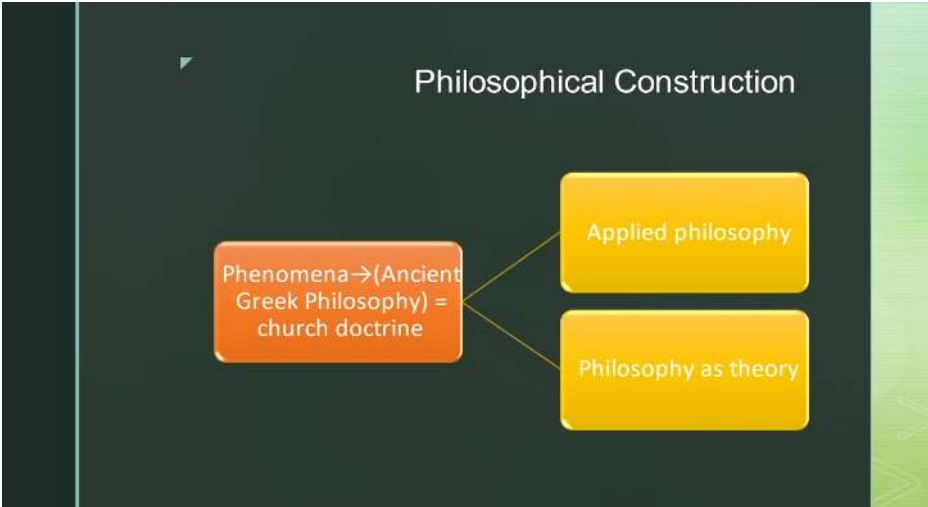

Demythologisation then emerged as the next stage in philosophical development; this was pioneered by pre-Socrates philosophers; and this was where, due to rational abilities in thinking, philosophy achieved significant development as shown in the thinking of the trio of great philosophers that is Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle. Since that time, philosophy, which originally had a mythological character, developed to become a discipline which covered several different fields. Such was the dynamics of philosophical development that specific branches came into being.

According to Wibisona,³ well before philosophy developed, Aristotle had affirmed philosophy as included all activities which can be brought to rational account. And their divisions have become poetic knowledge (applied); that is, a body of knowledge that developed into a practical discipline in a normative sense. The body split up into branches such as ethics, politics, and so on, as well as into theoretical science. It is indeed science that was regarded to be the most important; this broad discipline was thus further divided to become the natural sciences and the exact sciences; and its first philosophy later became known as metaphysics.

Post-Aristotle, Greek philosophy became the teaching of praxis and even mysticism as taught by Stoa and Epicuri, and then Plotinus. At the same time, when the Roman Empire's power diminished, it then signaled the arrival of a new phase; that is, a philosophy with theological characteristics, and the teaching of devotion to religion. This was, at a time, when religion dominated. During this Middle Ages period, the great philosophers were Augustinus and Thomas Aquinas who had given special characteristics to the philosophy; in other words, it gave it a theological-centric character.

This theological-centricism was in the context of the domination of religious circles; it was a significant power structure; and, as a result, the measures of truth were determined as an adjustment or idealization of the dominant circle or church doctrine. Secular ideas had distilled from the antonyms of the church doctrine, which then made the church or monasteries not only centres of religious activity; they, however, also became centres of intellectual activity. The form of philosophical construction at the time can be illustrated in the diagram below:

Figure 1: Construction of Philosophy

2. Eastern (Arab) Philosophy: Al Makassari's References

In this regard, eastern Arab philosophy emerged, and it was developed and expanded by al-Kindi, al-Farabi, Ibn Sina, Ibn Rushd, and al-Ghazali; each of these personalities became influential philosophers; and they were the ones who became Shaykh Yusuf al Makassari's references. Indirectly, it may be argued that Arab philosophy, which included Shaykh Yusuf's thoughts, was a continuation of Aristotle's philosophical thoughts; these innovative ideas were spread from the East by Arab philosophers who were originally brought to Spain's Cordova. This was then inherited by the western world through the Patristic and Scholastic groups.

Wells⁴ stated that "if the Greeks were the founders of scientific method, then the Muslim eastern people were its fathers who adopted it." This showed that there was a connection of an epistemological bases with philosophy, as the core of knowledge that was pioneered during the ancient Greek period; it contained 15th century philosophical thinking which matured and developed into the 18th century aufklaerung (enlightenment) movement. These philosophical thoughts became part of the thinking of the Muslims such as Shaykh Yusuf.

Shaykh Yusuf had learned its history, both directly and indirectly, from philosophers in Southwest Asia and North Africa; this was before he developed his own thoughts in particular his ideas regard ethics, and more so his special interest in Sufism that was the main ingredients of Muslim philosophy. Shaykh Yusuf's philosophy was born after the Renaissance movement. As a result, it may be characterized as modern philosophy; one that had come through a revolutionary system that was pioneered by modern philosophers such as: Copernicus, Galileo Galilei, Kepler, Descartes, and Imanuel Kant. This had very extensive implications. On the one hand, autonomy together with all its freedoms are once again in the hands of humankind, whereas, on the other hand, humankind had taken life in the direction of a secular world; that is, a life free from the earlier position which was a form of religious and church colony and sub-colony.

Together with that, religion which had earlier controlled and was integrated with philosophy, was immediately left by philosophy. Each philosophy stood by itself and developed according to its respective foundations and directions of thinking. And within its subsequent development, philosophy was left with its branches, and with its respective methodologies. This situation was very much influenced by the development of a rationalization of human thinking which idealized objects, both which exist in a material and non-material form, and within the possible. From here, the branches of philosophy were born and from where the thoughts of Shaykh Yusuf himself can be located.

3. Shaykh Yusuf's Thoughts

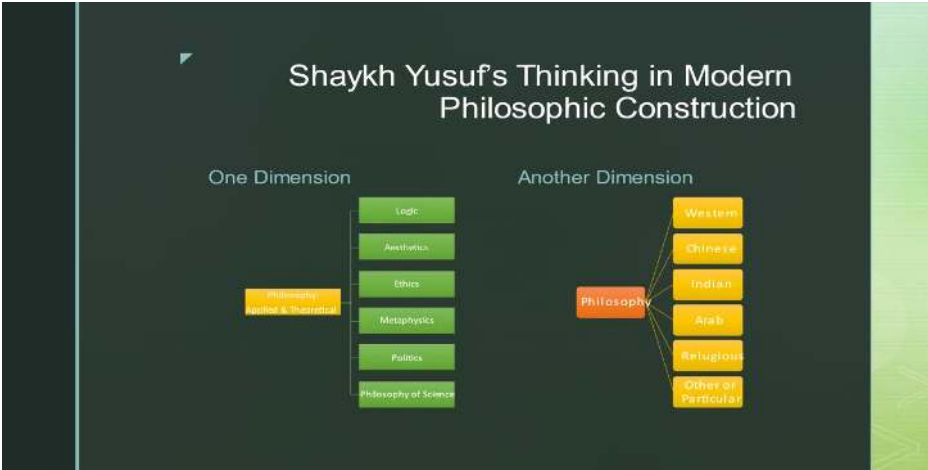

Shaykh Yusuf's thoughts were embedded in religion (that is, Islam); and this religious tradition, compared to others, has as its foundations two unquestionable textual sources (namely, Qur'an and Hadith [prophetic statements]); these two became the basis for Shaykh’s Yusuf’s thinking and outlook. From these sources, one may be able to categorize his thoughts and identify the construction of Shaykh Yusuf’s thinking that was tied to the field of religious philosophy; this is, in turn, described as noble morals (that is, al akhlaq ul karimah).

In philosophy, this field is one of the three main branches of philosophy, that is Logic, Aesthetics, and Ethics. Logic is a field which studies aspects of what can be called right or wrong. While aesthetics is a branch which studies aspects can be considered beautiful and ugly, ethics is a branch which studies those aspects that can be considered good and bad.⁵

All these three main branches of philosophy were later added to Metaphysics and Politics. Metaphysics is a branch which studies theoretical aspects about what is: about the essence of the presence (dhat) of Allah (that is, God), about the essence of thinking, and the relationship between dhat and thinking. Whereas politics is a branch which studies aspects of humankind in relation to one another to discover the ideal relationship.

Figure 2: Shaykh’s Philosophy: In Context

Then the fifth main branch is further developed to become philosophical branches which have more specific fields of study; they are, among others, the philosophy of science that is a field which studies ontological aspects (essence), epistemology that is related to studies of the processes of knowledge, and axiology that is related to the study of values.

3.1 Shaykh’s Philosophy: Branches

Alongside Figure 2 above, Philosophy’s different branches also shaped the construction of the Shaykh’s thinking within modern philosophical context; while the one unpacks the branches and the other illustrates the status of ethics with its sub-divisions:

Figure 3: Branches of Philosophy

Figure 4: Ethics and Its Sub-Divisions

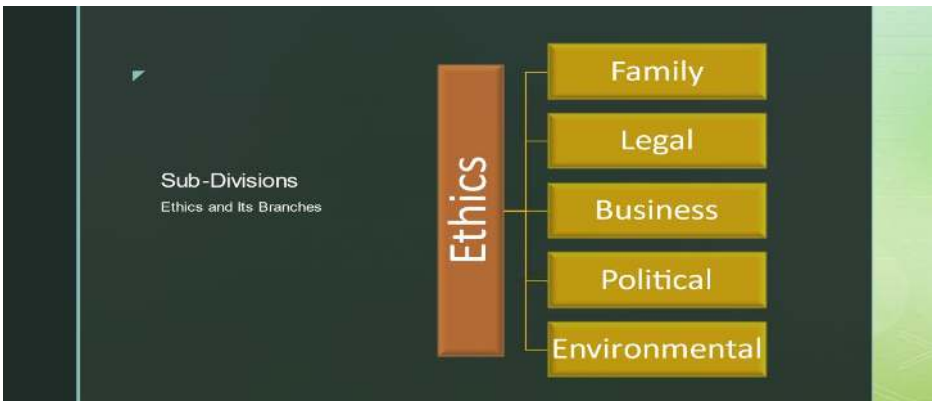

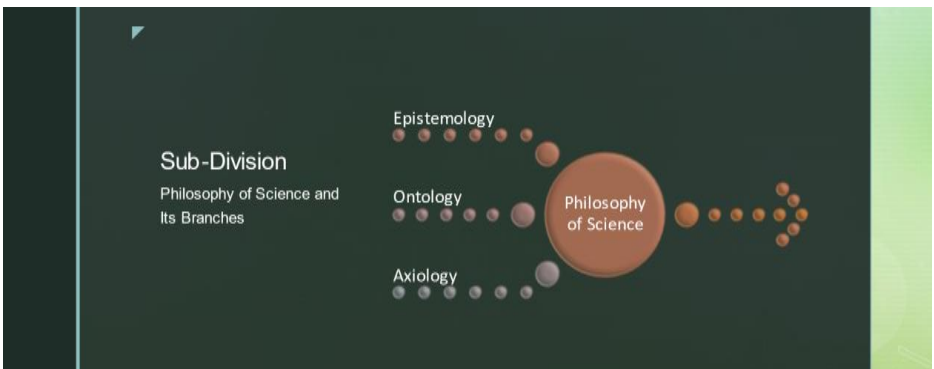

Figure 5: Philosophy of Science and its Branches

3.2 Shaykh Yusuf's Philosophical Viewpoint

Sufis always tried to maintain the ideal of God, not only as a philosophy but also as a philosophy of religion. A philosophy of religion has been applied to a religion that may not be a quasi-truth. For all of those who have had a deep appreciation of ethics, they are possibly not alone among thousands of people who have experienced and have had many difficulties, pressures, and sacrifices in life in being able to use their knowledge of ethics in their lives.⁶

For Sufis, a philosophy of life has a close connection with the existence of the Creator. Therefore, the philosophy that they embrace in their lives is never separated from their religious beliefs, in this case Islam. According to the Muslim philosophy of life, the search for identity means finding the source of Life, namely God the Great Creator. Therefore, in the Sufi concept, seeking the essence and knowing oneself also means seeking the truth about God. This view becomes a philosophy of life which is guided by religion. The search for God, however, is not only pursued based on one's own desires but also through religious dogma. Sufis, in their search for the essence of life and the Creator, do so based on the teachings of Islam, namely the Shari'ah. Theists, who are not bound by organized religion, differ in their search for God (and they do this) in accordance with their own wishes and means without being bound by formal religious teachings. It is this that distinguishes Sufis from the seekers of God and the seekers of truth in philosophical tradition.

Communities often have a learning attitude to acquire ethical knowledge, but they continue to criticize their own religion or other religions which have external means to destroy the beliefs of others. This is humankind's basic nature to influence others and saying others have taken a wrong path as regards their own convictions. Seldom does someone ask him/herself: have I deviated from the right path? Or, at the very least, (the person does) not force others to take a wrong path. So, once human love has developed in a person's heart, he/she (then) begins to understand others as a parent understands his/her children; and (he/she then) says to him/herself: if others take the wrong path, they may be (from among) those who cross a gorge (to the right path). The idea of God is then (viewed as) a bridge that carries a devotee safely to the destination.⁷

There are four paths or phases that lead a person toward spiritual knowledge, from the finite to the infinite. The various phases are Shari'ah (Islamic law), tarekat/ tariqah (path of truth), hakekat/haqiqat (the essence), and makrifat/ma'rifat (surrender to God). In the following sections, all four concepts will be analyzed along with their relationships with the key concepts in Shaykh Yusuf's works and the development of dakwah (proselytizing).

To obtain a picture which is quite clear yet brief and comprehensive concerning Shaykh Yusuf's philosophical views, the most important matter which needs to be discussed in this study is the ontological viewpoint covering how Muslims view God and the natural surroundings. Further, because Shaykh Yusuf's ideas depart from a Muslim perspective, this chapter will briefly and clearly explain Hegel and Marx's philosophical viewpoints to show how each one's thinking always references the thinker's philosophical landscape and convictions.

This sub-section will, therefore, discuss several important concepts; these will include concepts such as ontology, epistemology, sources of true knowledge and Islam's basic viewpoints; (and) according to Shaykh Yusuf, the concepts will include Shari'ah, tariqah, haqiqat and ma'rifat. Below, the notion of ontology in Islam (that is, God and the world) will be explained. And, against this backdrop, it will discuss, on the one hand, the differences between the Muslim notions of ontology and those of views advocated by Hegel and Marx respectively; and, on the other, it will discuss the notion of the Epistemology of Knowledge; and this will include a comparison of Shaykh Yusuf's epistemology with Hegel and Marx's philosophical viewpoints.

4. Two Philosophical Positions: Ontology and Epistemology

4.1 Ontology: A Muslim Perspective

This study compares the Muslim viewpoint concerning an ontology of God and the world with those of Hegel and Marx; these comparative references are undertaken to show that when discussing ontological problems that thinkers cannot be separated from the basic standpoint of their philosophy of life; one that departs from religion or the ideology or conviction that they hold. Therefore, in relation to Shaykh Yusuf's philosophical perspectives, it is Islam's teachings that form the background of his philosophical thoughts and outlook. This being the case, it is not surprising that one should look at Shaykh Yusuf's philosophical views; ones that are embedded within an ontological frame. A frame that Shaykh Yusuf referred to and believed in; this is like the way Hegel sourced his viewpoints and thoughts and the away Marxist viewpoints were sourced in Karl Marx's way of thinking. In this way, there is consistency by referring to the basic viewpoints of the thinker's philosophy that is being studied; (this may be viewed as) an important condition to explore their thinking with greater sharpness and depth.

From the perspective of Islam, God is the sole Creator and the causa prima for all events. This does not mean humans are not given free will. Humans' free will remains bound to takdir (God's pre-ordainments) because God is omnipresent. This is also discussed in Shaykh Yusuf's work. Our existence according to Islam's ontology is that God is the owner and the maintainer of the universe; this implies that the creation of nature and its contents are God's mission and will.

In Islam, the term often used to show the managing of nature and its creatures which has been entrusted to humans is called a trust (amanah); that is a trust from God to humans as God's khalifah (vice-regent) for the welfare of humankind and living creatures. Because of that, ontologically, God and humans have a close connection. God will question the duties and the amanah which has been placed upon humans, whereas humans have the responsibility for all their actions, both for themselves and their actions towards the natural world around them.

In his work, Shaykh Yusuf affirmed that ontologically, the existence of humans and nature cannot escape God's overarching control. This means that God encompasses everything in this world. In this way, nothing escapes His control. Therefore, in Islam, each Muslim is required to always monitor hi/herself and all his/her actions, because the relations with him/herself, with other individuals, with nature, and with God is closely related to the philosophy of ontology, or a view of life of his/her existence in this world. In this way, each Muslim is aware of being held to account in the hereafter. This is the ontological viewpoint explained by Shaykh Yusuf.

4.2 Ontology: Hegel and Marx's Standpoints

In Hegel's view, the world is a rational order. Rationality can only be known through thinking. The function of philosophy is to understand principles by which logic works. In his view, the world is dynamic, as is the case with thought. The world and the mind are both active in an evolutionary process. And so, contradiction is the root of life and movement. Everything tends to turn into its opposite. Without contradictions, there would be no motion and life.

Despite this, nature continues to move and integrate parts into a unified whole, embodying its actual essence. In this evolutionary process, aims and objectives are realized. This is the theological conception of existence. The most important aspect in evolution is not what has occurred at the beginning but the results in the end.⁸

According to Hegel, the absolute is essentially the result and the beginning of actual wholeness. In this way, a human being can achieve the highest level of knowledge, if he/she grasps the idea of the world, knows its significance, the workings of the universal dynamic mind, its categories, and its meanings. Concepts of the intellect are in accordance with the objective evolution of the world. The categories are subjective thought, and they are like categories of the universe; therefore, thought and being/existence are one.

Furthermore, Hegel paid great attention to the importance of the rules of dialectics because it is the result of an active mind. Therefore, the dialectical method must produce a rational process; a series of logical work in the world because reason is a dynamic process which moves dialectically drawing conclusions of contradictions, oppositions, and negations. In dialectical thinking, these thoughts reconcile differences and unite the parts. This is a logical process, the whole is real, just as facts of the parts are only abstractions that must be brought to the order of the whole to obtain validity.

In his view of the ontology of nature and God, Hegel was of the view that it is when logic speaks of timeless forms outside of time, which are eternal, since before creation. Natural philosophy talks about the fact that the idea or the Absolute has come out of itself into space and time in a different state, namely its incarnation as nature. Thus, nature is the Absolute in a different state. Furthermore, natural philosophy traces the journey of the idea in its self-exile. There is a dialectic here. Beginning from a problem of time and space as a place of infinite plurality, where ideas have gone astray, to the problem of the individual limitations which eventually ascend to the spirit of the Absolute.⁹

Concerning the existence of time and space in this world, according to Hegel, the belief that this world exists is important regardless of our experience and knowledge of it; this is in accordance with the assumptions of everyday life and is included in almost all sciences. These assumptions indeed cannot be proven conclusively however, but it can explain events and anomalies in our lives more than any other approach. In our conscious actions, we are always convinced of the existence of objects outside of ourselves. Not only is one aware of these matters, but one is also aware that one is conscious (of everything). A general characteristic of one's senses and one's phases of reflection is that one is conscious of the existence of objects other than oneself. This is something which is not influenced by one's consciousness of it. The world of objects is relative to me who is conscious and who experiences those objects. Apart from that there are elements which come from outside. There are objects that have a form that is independent outside of one's experience; and this is one thing that seems certain.¹⁰

In this view on the spirit and divinity, Hegel holds that the philosophy of the soul shows how reason transcends the objective realm, returning to itself or entering the self-consciousness. The spirit goes through dialectical phases of evolution, and it reveals itself as a subjective spirit and absolute spirit. The subjective spirit revealed itself as the soul which depends on nature and the soul's spirit which becomes one with nature in knowledge. The absolute spirit is found in perfect freedom only in the life of the spirit. In relation to religious life, according to Hegel, religious truth reaches a satisfying statement when the idea reaches full consciousness of itself in pure thought.¹¹

In this way, reason governs the world in its relationships; this, however, occurs with a further known application that is in the form of religious truth. In other words, it is the belief that the world is bound to characteristics of coincidences and possible external causes, other than God (the Good Sustainer) who controls it. In this regard, the essence of the discipline of philosophy values these viewpoints on these matters. So, the truth is that the Good Sustainer (that is, God) presides over events in this world; this is together with the proposition discussed because Divine Providence's wisdom is accompanied by an unlimited power, which realizes its goal; that is, to plan a rational world. Logic or ratio is thought that conditions itself with perfect freedom.

Since the belief is indeterminate, it is the so-called belief in good stewardship which is general and is not exercised in a limited or a demonstrated application in connection with the entire course of human history. However, to explain history is to portray an individual's desires, passions, genius, active abilities, (and) those who take their part in great stages, and the processes which have been determined by destinate that is shown; this is what is called God's plan.¹²

Differently from Hegel, Marx's view is about materialism which becomes a foundation for the view about God and nature; this is thus an antithesis to Hegel's idealistic ideas. According to Marx, for example, in relation to God and nature as well as the human being, it is not true that the human being is primarily a creative spirit, and that everything originates from an absolute spirit. A human being is a physical creature as a concrete subject in a community. Spiritual phenomena follow the material reality. And the community and humans become subjects of society that develops in history. In history, through their work, human beings have increasingly developed into authentic humans.¹³

In this way, according to Marx's perspective, it is humans who determine everything in the passage of history. There is no interference of a Creator spirit or God. It is with the human being's creative powers that the course of history develops, and that develop human beings and nature, including the advancement of industry. It is this, according to Marx, that determines the development of an economy of consumption and production. That is, the reason why Marx's view is called a philosophical view which is very materialistic. Its entirety must be proven in a concrete form.

An incongruity is to add that human beings are not free to choose their productive work. A productive workforce is the product of previous activity. As a result, productive work is the output of a human's practical labours; but this labour itself is conditioned by situations where humans find that they are themselves the products of the generations which preceded them. Because the simple fact is that each generation is because of the previous generation; this is in effect the raw material for new production. So, considering this, a generation is born consistent with the history of humankind. Humankind's social history is none other than a history of their individual development of which humans are both conscious of, or not conscious of. Their material relations are the basis of all their relations.

These material relations are only forms which are required to realize their material and individual activities.¹⁴ This explanation forms a part of Marx's letter to P.N. Annikov to explain his views; at the same time, it is a reply to Proudhon's response to Marx's ideas of historical materialism. Proudhon was a philosopher who subscribed to Hegel's views, which were criticized by Marx. To see a more detailed discussion concerning Marx's view of dialectical materialism that is based on an individual's effort and economic products.¹⁵

According to Marx, community is in its entirety one of economic relations of both production and consumption which originate from the forces of economic production, that is technique and labour. Socio-economic life determines the meaning of the state. The state is a creation of human beings who live in a community which is primarily determined by political forces. Socio-economic life also determines law, morality, religion, and science. These phenomena include the superstructure of society, while economic relations include an infrastructure that determines the development of a superstructure.¹⁶

Furthermore, according to Marx, the most important matter to be scrutinized and given attention to is the alienation of workers caused by the capitalist system. In capitalism, the means of production are privately owned. Capital increases because labour is used to gain profit for the capitalists who have invested in a capital system. The workforce is important in the process of production, but they do not advance, because capitalists have absolute power over the workers. The capitalists determine the wages and can dismiss workers as they please. Workers, therefore, live in alienation/isolation and in uncertainty because all the profits will return to their employers. They are alienated from their employers because they live beneath their employers' power. The workers thus live in poverty.

Marx also highlights the state, which is (in) the power of the owners. Through the state, the owners can maintain a form of society that (takes in) profits (for) them. The established state opposes the working classes and farmers' interests. While society comprises of conflicting classes, the state remains needed (by all). Apart from the state as a human creation, there is also religion. Religion is used as entertainment for the people, so that people remain patient and accept the situation. Religion, according to Marx, is an intoxicating drug for the people. To overcome this, according to Marx, the means of production have a social characteristic. Because these tools are produced by the people and for the people, this implies that the means of production are owned by society. It is unfair if these means of production are privately owned because they are essentially social in nature. Thus, it must be in public ownership.

In Marx's view, all developments in the community occur in three phases. The first is the thesis, the second is the antithesis, and the third is the synthesis. In the past, the community comprised of individuals who owned their own tools. Then in the period of liberalism, capital accumulates in the hands of a select number of people. The means of production became the property of one class. This is the anti-thesis, and its synthesis is that it is appropriate that everyone jointly own the means of production. In a capitalist society, according to Marx, businesspeople must accumulate capital to make investments in large companies, so that small businesses disappear, and large companies get a monopoly. Because of fierce competition in the market from time to time, an economic crisis will arise at any time; (and) that is, when profits obtained decrease. As production continues to increase, eventually the market will be saturated with goods to the point where there are no more buyers. Because of stalled production, workers are dismissed, and they inevitably become poor. At its peak of development, the working class will rebel and takeover power.

From this dialectic that relies on humans as the central theme of its philosophical viewpoint, according to Marx, a political revolution will emerge (and) this will be followed by a social revolution. To be successful, one needs to form a proletarian dictatorship whose task it is to eliminate the remnants of social life from the previous period. This dictatorship continues until the bourgeoisie class disappears; that is, the creation of a shared life which is infused with a new spirit. At that time, there was no place for the state or law to be established to defend the rights of a single class. In the ideal situation, the alienation between the person and his/her work has been overcome.¹⁷

4.3 Epistemology: Shaykh Yusuf's View vis-à-vis Other Philosophical Perspectives

What is meant by epistemology here is a branch of philosophy which studies sources, character, and the truth of knowledge. As for the problem to be examined here, it will cover the nature of the sources and truth of knowledge, as well as in relation to the character of knowledge and its relationship with the real world that is external to us; and lastly, how to discriminate between what is true and false. A number of these issues are important because of our conception about reality relies on our understanding of what we know. Conversely, our theory of knowledge depends on our understanding of ourselves in the totality of reality.¹⁸

In this regard, Shaykh Yusuf's views on sources of knowledge is knowledge that comes from Islam and the truth is measured in accordance with the teachings of Shari'ah. To illustrate this point, Shaykh Yusuf stressed the importance of the knowledge of legal sources in his work; that is, the Qur'an and Hadith as well as the Muslim scholars' (that is, 'ulama') views and their interpretation of Islam's teachings.

In essence, the ontological, epistemological, and axiological issues according to Shaykh Yusuf's philosophical views - as regards 'ethics' - are covered in four fundamental positions about God, the universe, and the self. These four are Sharia, tarekat, hakekat and makrifat. Whereas in Hegel's view, as analyzed above, the world is governed by the power of the mind. It was from the power of thought that religion emerged; this means that the creation of the world, according to Hegel, was not something that was by chance but an event that constituted God's plan or will.

In Marx's view, it is humans who are the main actors in historical change. Furthermore, according to Marx, actions come first and thoughts second. Thus, human beings are the actors that act and have a central role in bringing about social change and create the dynamics of history. According to Marx, knowledge of nature cannot be called knowledge if it is not connected to action. Because of that, Marx's dialectical materialism is considered a philosophical system which provides a basis for class struggle and revolutionary action in a society.

5. Conclusion

In this chapter, a brief discussion was undertaken concerning ontology and epistemology. The foundations of these two concepts have been discoursed by different philosophical schools (that is, Muslim schools vis-à-vis Hegelian/Marxists schools). Shaykh Yusuf's views were analyzed considering the views advocated by Hegel and Marx. Their respective perspectives essentially facilitated a sharpening of the conceptual problems.

While Shaykh Yusuf's standpoints were unpacked by referring to his notions of these two key philosophical concepts, reference was made to philosophical ideas of two prominent western scholars; they are scholars who offered an opposite and dialectic insight to the Shaykh's opinions. Their respective views assisted in offering a level of understanding and a sharper philosophical analysis of the main ideas.

6. Bibliography

6.1 Books

- Al-Maqdisi, Faidullah al-Hasani. 1995. Fathurrahman li Talib il-Qur'an (Ed. M. Dahlan). Beirut: Darul Fikr.
- Hegel, George Wilhelm Friedrich. 2007. The Philosophy of History (Tr.: Filsafat Sejarah). Yogyakarta: Pustaka Pelajar.
- Hegel, George Wilhelm Friedrich. 1984. Lectures on the Philosophy of Religion, (Ed. Peter C. Hodgson). California: University of California Press.

- Hegel, George Wilhelm Friedrich. 2002. Faith and Knowledge (Tr. Affandy). Yogyakarta: IRCiSoD.
- Khan, Ali Mahdi. 2001. The Elements of Islamic Philosophy (tr. Dasar-Dasar Filsafat Islam) Bandung.
- Mudhafir, Ali. 2001. Kamus Filsuf Barat. Yogyakarta: Pustaka Pelajar.
- Peursen, C. A. van. 1988. Cultuur in Stroomversnelling-een Geheel Bewerkte Uitgave Van (tr. Dick Hartoko, Kanisius). Yogyakarta.
- Suria Sumantri, Jujun. 1993. Filsafat Ilmu, Sebuah Pengantar Populer. Jakarta: Pustaka Sinar Harapan.
- Suria Sumantri, Jujun. 2006. Ilmu dalam Perspektif. Jakarta: Yayasan Obor Indonesia.
- Titus, Harold H. et al. 1984. Living Issues in Philosophy (tr. H.M. Rasjidi). Jakarta: Bulan Bintang.
- Tudjimah, C.S.1997. Syeikh Yusuf Makasar, Riwayat dan Ajarannya. Jakarta: Penerbit Universitas Indonesia Press.
- Marx, Karl. 2004. Poverty of Philosophy (tr. Ira Iramanto). Jakarta: Hasta Mitra.

6.2 Documents/Manuscripts, Academic papers, Newspapers, and Other Sources

- Azra, Azumardi. 2007. 'Radikalisme Kelompok Islam di Indonesia.' In Harian Kompas, Ed. 27 Juli.
- Baqi (al), Muhammad Fu'ad Abdul. n.d. Al-Mu'jam al-Mufahras li al-Fazh Al-Quran. Document shown by PPs Syarif Hidayatullah State Islamic University. Jakarta: UIN.
- Cawidu, Harifuddin. 1994. Peringatan 300 tahun Mendaratnya Syeikh Yusuf al-Khlwaty al-Makassary di Afrika Selatan, Unpublished Seminar Paper. Ujung Pandang: Hasanudin University,
- Kaelan, M.S. 2007. Kesatuan Epistemologi di Era Reformasi dan Revitalisasi Nation State, Professorial Confirmation Speech at the Faculty of Philosophy. Yogyakarta: Universitas Gadjah Mada.
- Kompas*. 2008. "Jejak Syekh Yusuf di Cape Town." The Republic of Indonesian President, Susilo Bambang Yudoyono. Newspaper Report, 16 March and 18 March.
- Kusmaryanto, C.B. n.d. Etika Levinas. Unpublished Lecture material: Post-graduate Program. Yogyakarta: Universitas Gadjah Mada.
- Mangemba, H.D. 1994. Syekh Yusuf Tuanta Salmaka Pahlawan Nasional, Penyebar Agama Islam dan Pejuang Hak Asasi Manusia Unpublished Seminar Paper. Ujung Pandang: Hasanuddin University.
- Mappangara, Suriadi. 2009. 'Bugis-Makassar dalam Lintasan Sejarah.' In Kompas, 16 January.
- Mustafa, Mustari. 1995. Studi Metodologi Dakwah Yayasan Paramadina Jakarta, Unpublished Thesis Faculty of Dakwah and Communication. Makassar: Alauddin Islamic University.

- Mustafa, Mustari. 2011. Agama dalam Bayang-Bayang Etis Syaikh Yusuf al-Makassary, Yogyakarta: LKiS.
- Mustafa, Mustari. 2000. Pengaruh Dakwah terhadap Kesadaran Lingkungan Hidup (studi kasus pada beberapa Majelis Ta'lim Kota Makassar), Unpublished Thesis Education and Social Sciences Department. Makassar: Makassar State University.
- Said, Nurhidayat Muh. 2013. Dakwah dan Problematika Umat Islam. Dalam Jurnal Dakwah Tabligh. 14(1): 1-23, Juni (downloaded on 5 April 2018).
- Wibisono, Koento. 1996. Filsafat Ilmu (comp. Tim Dosen), Fakultas filsafat UGM. Yogyakarta: Penerbit Liberty.

6.3 Arabic Documents/Manuscripts, National Library

- Arabic documents/Manuscripts. 1186 H./1772 AD. Matalib Salikin. Bundle A. 101. (Ed. Sanwani), Jakarta: National Library.
- Arabic Documents/Manuscript. 1186 H./1772 AD. Al-Nafhah al-Saylaniyah. Bundle A. 101. (Ed. Sanwani). Jakarta: National Library.
- Arabic Documents/Manuscript. 1186 H./1772 AD. Qurratul 'Ain. Bundle A. 101. (Ed. Sanwani). Jakarta: National Library.
- Arabic Documents/Manuscripts. 1186 H./1772 AD. Sirrul Asrar. Bundle A. 101. (Ed. Sanwani). Jakarta: National Library.
- Arabic Documents/Manuscripts. 1186 H./1772 AD. Taj al-Asrar fi Tahqiq Masyarib al-Arifin. Bundle A. 101. (Ed. Sanwani). Jakarta: National Library,
- Arabic Documents/Manuscripts. 1186 H./1772 AD. Zubdat al Asrar fi Tahqiq Ba'dha Masyarib al-Akhyar. Bundle A. 101. (Ed. Sanwani). Jakarta: National Library.
- Lubis, Nabila. 1996. Syekh Yusuf al-Taj al-Makasari: Menyingkap Intisari Segala Rahasia. Bandung: Fakultas Sastera Universitas Indonesia & Ecole Francaise of Extrême Orient Mizan.
- Salam, Solichin. 1994. Syekh Yusuf 'Singa dari Gowa' (Ulama berkaliber Internasional). Jakarta: Penerbit Yayasan Pembina Generasi Penerus Indonesia (YPGPI) in cooperation with Gema Salam.
- Nawawi. 2008. Strategi Dakwah; Studi Pemecahan Masalah. In Jurnal Komunika Fakultas Dakwah STAIN Purwokerto. 2(2), Juli-Desember (downloaded 6 April 2018).
- Puang Rama, S. Djamaluddin Assegaf., 1994, Penyebaran Ajaran Syekh Yusuf di Sulawesi Selatan. Ujung Pandang: Hasanuddin University. Unpublished Seminar Paper.
- Riyanto, Armada. 2009. Etika Mati di Aushchwitz dan Gaza, Kompas (daily newspaper), 17 January (Trans Televisi). Syekh Yusuf, dalam Jejak Langkah, Jakarta, 31 March 2007.

Endnotes

¹ The title and contents of this work are a part of the writer's book entitled Islam Ramah, Ketajaman Mata Batin dan Mata Pena dalam Karya dan Dakwah Syaikh Yusuf Al-Makassary which will be published by Bildung Yogyakarta.

² Van Peursen, 1980: 1.

³ Wibisona, 2003: 3-4.

⁴ Koento, 2003.

⁵ Suriasumantri, 1993: 32- 33

⁶ Khan, 2001: 59.

⁷ Khan, 2001: 59.

⁸ Mudhafir, 2001: 217.

⁹ Mudhafir, 2001: 221.

¹⁰ Titus et al 1984: 226.

¹¹ Mudhafir, 2001: 221-223.

¹² Hegel, 2007: 17-18.

¹³ Mudhafir, 2001: 349.

¹⁴ Marx, 2004: 189.

¹⁵ Karl Marx, 2004.

¹⁶ Mudhafir, 2001: 350.

¹⁷ Mudhafir, 2001: 350.

¹⁸ Titus et al 1984: 20.

CHAPTER FOUR

Tawhid's Impeccable Lustre: Essential Teachings of Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari

Muzdalifah Sahib

Abstract

This chapter is based on the author's research and observation in Leiden, Indonesia, and South Africa. It explores the notion of Tawhid as part of the Shaykh's reform agenda to convert Archipelago's animistic society into fervent Muslims; and he uses it as a basis to build a Muslim community at Cabo de Goede Hoop, and finally, influence much to the good bilateral relationship developed between modern-day Indonesia and South Africa. Shaykh Yusuf (1626-1699) is considered a national hero of both countries and his movements from Gowa (South Sulawesi) to other regions such as the Arabian Peninsula were motivated by his wish to deepen his understanding of Islamic mysticism. This was supported by his local teachers and the needs of the Gowa Kingdom for a qualified Muslim scholar for the emerging Muslim communities. This responsibility fostered in him a sense of bravery for adventure, and he ended up wandering parts the world in search of Islamic knowledge. In their purpose to rule the East Indian countries and remove his influence over his fellow citizens, the Dutch banished Shaykh Yusuf initially to Ceylon and then to Cabo de Goede Hoop (1684-1699). He was a pioneer in the exposition of the theological concept, namely Tawhīd Waḥdat al-Ṣamad (The Unity of Dependence Direction). This theological exposition is based on the immaculate concept of tawhīd as captured in Maṭālib al-Sālikīn (the Quests of the Spiritual Seekers). Its practitioners are directed to submit themselves to the Oneness of God and to none other being. This teaching is implemented by all his followers in awrād (dhikrs/litanies' forms) and become bright lights in their hearts and will be more shining in Indonesia and South Africa.

Keywords: Tawhid's Impeccable Lustre, Essential Teachings, Immaculate Tawhid, Waḥdat al-Ṣamad, Animistics, Real/fervent Muslims, Bilateral Relations

1. Introduction

Shaykh Yusuf al-Makassari was one of the Melayu Archipelago/Malay-Indonesian scholars who was part of the cosmopolitan scholarly network; one that was centered in the Haramayn (that is, Makka and Madīna). He was one of the reformers who was active in Sufism (referred to as 'Islamic mysticism') as a Sufi Shaykh in the seventeenth century. He was a pioneer in the exposition of the theological concept, namely Tawhīd Waḥdat al-Ṣamad (The Unity of Dependence Direction).

This theological exposition is based on the immaculate concept of tawhīd as captured in Maṭālib al-Sālikīn (the Quests of the Spiritual Seekers). The concept of tawhīd captures the essence of Chapter al-Ikhlash.¹ Its spiritual seekers or practitioners are directed to submit themselves to the Oneness of God and to none other being. To this day, this foundational teaching of tawhīd the Shaykh stressed and left for his communities in the Archipelago's South Sulawesi and South Africa's Greater Cape Town; this vibrant concept caused the Shaykh's impeccable teachings to restore rich lustre to the lives of the diverse communities who reside in both regions. For this chapter, the author offers a simplified understanding of this critical concept as it features in the selected texts that are attributed to the Shaykh.²

2. Shaykh Yusuf's Origins

Shaykh Yusuf was born in the Gowa-Tallo palace, Parangloe, on the 3rd of July 1626 corresponding to the 8th of Shawwāl 1036. He was the son of Abū al-Jalāl Sayyid 'Abd Allāh Khidr bin Abī al-Khayr Yahya bin 'Alawī al-Haḍramī (Tuanta Manjalāwī) and Āmina I Tubiani Daeng Kunjung and grew up in royal surroundings. After detailed research regarding his father's origin, it may be concluded that Shaykh Yusuf was a descendant of the Ahl al-Bayt and he was twenty generations removed from Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ.

The Shaykh's full name according to the Arab tradition was Abū al-Maḥāsin al-Shaykh al-Ḥājj Yusuf al-Shāfi'ī al-Ash'arī, Hadiyyat Allāh Tāj al-Khalwaṭī al-Jāwī al-Makassarī bin Walī' Allāh Abī al-Jalāl 'Abd Allāh Khidr bin Abī al-Khayr Yahya bin 'Alawī al-Haḍramī. He was also known by other titles and reflected in his treatise Tuhfat al-Mursala. Herein, he was referred to as Abū al-Harkānī (that is, a father of motion [this is as a sign of appreciation from all his disciples and his followers]); this was probably because he participated in a movement that defended the human rights of the subjugated communities in the Archipelago. Throughout this chapter, he will be referred to by the title Shaykh Yusuf al-Makassarī.

In the Gowa-Tallo Palace, he grew up under the care of Sulṭān Alā' al-Dīn who treated him as his own son. The Sultan had a daughter, the Lady Princess Sitti Daeng Nisanga who later became the Shaykh's first wife at the age of 18. At that time, the Kingdom of Gowa needed a qualified Muslim scholar to convert its animistic society to become fervent Muslims. This responsibility encouraged him to wander travel parts of the world in search of knowledge. Al-Makassarī's fruitful educational journey resulted in him having imbibed impeccable learning strategies that he imparted to those who studied under him. And these added lustre to the concept of tawhīd; an issue that will be explained in following section.

3. Shaykh Yusuf's Education

It is an established fact that he had an array of many principal masters; a few hailed from Macassar and most of them were in the Arabian Peninsula and surrounding areas. Al-Makassarī was a brave, strong, and intelligent man who wandered continuously in search of knowledge. He lived and studied in Celebes [1632-1644] and, thereafter, he moved to Banten [1644-1645]; after that, he finally landed up in Aceh [1645] where Shaykh Nūr al-Dīn al-Ranūrī stayed and left a legacy.

Though he did not meet this renowned Shaykh in Aceh, he managed to do so when he journeyed to South Asia (that is, India) [1645/1646-1648]. He eventually settled in the Arabian Peninsula [1649-1667] where he spent about twenty-one years with the purpose of deepening his knowledge about the Islamic sciences; this is where he was exposed to various Sufi Shaykhs who helped to shape his understanding and insights into sūfīsm.

3.1 Al-Makassarī's masters in Celebes/Makassar were

- 1) In Gowa, I Daeng ri Tasammeng (circa 1632-1636) taught him to read al-Qur'ān till he completed its memorisation when he reached the age of 8; he also learned from this teacher Arabic grammatical and Fiqh.³
- 2) In Tallo, Sri Naradireja ibn 'Abd al-Makmur (Datuk ri Panggentungan, the son of Datuk ri Bandang who built a Muslim school that specialized in Sufism in the town of Kaluku Bodoa during 1634; this teacher helped to immerse him in the practice of Sufism between 1636 and 1640.

- 3) Before he returned to Sri Naradireja in 1642, he studied under Aceh's Shaykh Jalāl al-Dīn al-Aidit; the latter built a Muslim school in 1640 and here he was further immersed in Sufi practices; this was during 1641.⁴
- 4) Sometime thereafter and for a short spell, he spent time at the top of Bawakaraeng Mountain where he was mentored by a teacher whose name was not mentioned.
- 5) So, around 1643, he was again with Sri Naradireja bin 'Abd al-Makmūr Datuk ri Pangguntungan (his master) and 'Abd Allāh Lokmok ri Antang (his colleague) from whom he took lessons in Sufism.

Although these teachers only taught the essentials of Sufism, they had a lasting influence on him.

3.2 Al-Makassarī's Principal Teachers Abroad

a) In Aceh till India (circa 1645 and 1648)

- 1) Shaykh Nūr al-Dīn al-Ranūrī (died 1068/1658) in Randūr, Surat, India. From him, he obtained a certificate of al-Qādirīyya.
- 2) Shaykh 'Umar bin 'Abd Allāh Bā Shaybān (d. 1066/1656) on the Gujarat coast.

b) In Yemen (circa 1649 and 1653)

- 3) Shaykh Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad 'Abd al-Bāqī (d. 1074/1664). From him, Shaykh Yusuf obtained a certificate of Ṭarīqat al-Naqshabandīyya.
- 4) Shaykh Tāj al-Dīn al-Malkib al-'Arifūn ibn Zakariyā bin Sultān 'Uthmān al-Naqshabandī (d. 1052/1642), whose family originated from Ḥaḍramawt, was from India.. It has been recorded in *al-Risālat al-Naqshabandīyya*⁵
- 5) Shaykh Sayyid 'Alī al-Zabidī (d. 1072/1662); and from him, he obtained a certificate of Ṭarīqa Sādat al-Bā 'Alawīyya.
- 6) Shaykh Muḥammad bin al-Wājīyyat al-Saudī al-Yamanī.⁶
- 7) Sayyid Abū Bākār ibn Sa'lūm Al-Irāqī was famous in Ḥaḍramawt and this was n recorded in Zubdat al-Asrār [Arabic Microfilm MSKBG 101 or Jakarta Manuscript A 101];
- 8) Imām 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Alawī al-Ḥaddād.

c) In Makka and Mādīna (circa 1653/1654 and 1657)

- 9) Shaykh Burḥān al-Dīn al-Mulla ibn al-Shaykh Ibrāhīm bin al-Husayn bin Shihab al-Kurdī al-Kūrānī (al-Kawrānū) al-Madanī (d.1101/1690) issued him with a Ṭarīqat al-Shattarīyya certificate.
- 10) Shaykh Aḥmad al-Qushāshī (d.1071/1661).
- 11) Shaykh Muḥammad Murāz al-Shāmī or Muḥammad Mirza al-Dimashqī (d. 1066/1656) who was a guest in al-Madīna al-Munawwara.
- 12) Shaykh Ḥasan ibn 'Alī bin 'Umar bin Yaḥyā al-'Ajamī al-Makkī (d.1113 /1701) whose name is recorded in al-Nafahāt al-Saylānīyya. He was one of the leading figures of Ṭarīqat al-Sattarīyya in Makka.
- 13) Shaykh 'Abd al-Karīm al-Naqshabandī al-Lahūrī, who came from Lahore (South Asian city and located in present-day Pakistan) settled in the al-Madīna al-Munawwara. Shaykh Yusuf recorded in Maṭālib al-Sālikīn.

d) In Damascus (circa 1658 and 1661)

- 14) The name of Shaykh Raslān al-Dimashqī or Shaykh Karīm al-Raslānī Abū Yahyā Zakariyyā al-Anṣārī appears in two treatises, namely Faṭḥ al-Raḥmān and Ma'nā al-Wujūd.
- 15) Shaykh Abū al-Barakāt Ayyūb ibn Aḥmad bin Ayyūb al-Khalwatī Al-Qurayshī (d. 1071/1661) honoured Shaykh Yusuf with the title Tāj al-Khalwatī and awarded him the certificate of Tariqat al-Kalwattiyya.

Between 1662 and 1667, Shaykh Yusuf returned to the hāram where he became a great teacher in Sūfism at the central mosque. And during 1664, he used his position to also complete copying the treatises of his Madina-based master Shaykh Burhān al-Dīn al-Mullā ibn al-Shaykh Ibrāhīm bin al-Ḥusayn bin Shihāb al-Kurdī al-Kūrānī (al-Kawrānī) al-Madanī.

From the list given above, it may be stated that Shaykh Yusuf learned from around fifteen Sūfī shaykhs or masters as well as scholars of Ḥadīth, Qur'ānic exegesis and Islamic jurisprudence from 1646 to 1661; the mentioned respected teachers molded him to become a great teacher at al-Ḥaram mosque in 1662; he taught and remained there till the end of 1667. It was reported that he became associated eighteen Sūfī orders and he obtained certificates from the orders. Shaykh Yusuf, by and large, received his education from scholars who adhered to the Sunni orthodoxy.

When he stayed in Makka's Ḥaram, he married twice. First with Khādīja, a daughter of an Imām of the Shafī'ī school of law at the Ḥaram and she bore him a daughter named Zammāniyya or Puang Amang in Lontarak. Then in Jedda, prior to his return to the land of his birth, he married a daughter of al-Shaykh Abū 'Abd Allāh Judda; and she was Sayyida Jidda. She bore a son, 'Abd Allāh, who was also called Daengta Kare Sitaba in Lontarak. Then, he returned to the Archipelago during the early part of 1668 and he stayed in Banten.

4. The Shaykh's Stay in Banten and Exile

While Shaykh Yusuf lived in Banten between 1668 and 1683, he played an important role, not only as a writer of important treatises on guiding the Muslim community at the time; but also as a defender of human rights on behalf of Sulṭān Ageng Tirtayasa the King of Banten (1651-1682). On 22nd March 1684, the Dutch exiled Shaykh Yusuf, who was then 58 years old, with members of his family (except his father-in-law) and his followers to Ceylon (now Sri Lanka). In his new location, al-Makassarī abandoned his political activities that had dominated almost half of his life in Banten. During the period when he countered the Dutch, it resulted in him losing many people who were dear to him especially his beloved Sulṭān Ageng Tirtayasa. The Shaykh had always respected the Sulṭān because of his commitment towards Islam. So, he withdrew to dedicating his life to mysticism and developing and following his ṣūfī order.

With respect to al-Makassarī's personality, he was a true hero not only in the Archipelago, but also at Cabo de Goede Hoop where he was banished during the last few years of his life. Al-Makassarī's life experiences as a Sufī did not keep him away from worldly affairs. He was a ṣūfī who also fought for the rights of everyone. He was thus called a great ṣūfī and mujāhid (warrior) as well as a father of the communities in the Archipelago and today the father of the nation. He was a ṣūfī scholar who spent a significant part of his life to not only search for knowledge but to deepen his understanding of Sufism. Earlier it was mentioned that while he was in the Arabian Peninsula, he scripted a few treatises in Arabic and these focused on ways of approaching God.

From 1693 to 1694, the Dutch exiled and moved Shaykh Yusuf from Ceylon on the 27th of June 1693 to Cabo de Goede Hoop on the ship called de Voetboog; he was forced to travel together with 49 members of his family and his followers. On 2 April 1694, Shaykh Yusuf and the entourage arrived at the Cabo de Goede Hoop where he was royally welcomed by the then Governor, Simon van der Stel. The Dutch feared his influence over the slave community at the Cape and thought it was best to seclude him far away from the port centre. Because of the role that the Shaykh played in the Archipelago, the authorities isolated him and his entourage to Zandvliet; they were kept far from Cape's slave community at a location that was many miles away from the port. Whilst there, a few sources seem to suggest that he did missionary work among the Cape communities such as the Khoi-Khoi and the San who were described as animists;⁷ it appears that there were some who embraced Islam by accepting the concept of tawhīd.

On May, the 23rd 1699 corresponding to 22nd of Dhū al-Qa'da 1110, he died at the age of 73 years. He was buried in the sand hills Faure, Zandvliet, Cabo de Goede Hoop.⁸ Interestingly, another shrine of Shaykh Yusuf is also found in Makassar. Both shrines are visited regularly by people paying homage to one of the most famous sons of the Melayu Archipelago who was not only a scholar but also a Sufi Shaykh and a and freedom fighter.⁹

5. The Shaykh's Essential Teachings: TAWHĪD

In this section, the focus turns to the essential teachings of the Shaykh; one of the key concepts is tawhid. Being a critical concept in all branches of the Islamic sciences, Muslim theologians, jurist, and practitioners of Sufism like the Shaykh stressed its importance and its relevance to individual and communal life. Because of the concept's centrality in Muslim life, the Shaykh underlined that through his treatises. The Shaykh, like others, taught that all Muslims should declare, acknowledge, prove, believe, and testify that: "There is no god but Allāh and Muḥammad is the Messenger of Allāh, and I believe in Allāh, His Angels, His Books, His Messengers and the Day of Resurrection, and that the decree of good and bad are from Allāh the Exalte (and that) Allāh is my Lord, Muḥammad is my Prophet, and the Qur'ān is my imam;" (a quote narrated by Muslim).¹⁰

As for Allāh's decree and destiny, Shaykh Yusuf said that being satisfied with the decree of Allāh is compulsory, but being satisfied with sin is disbelief.¹¹ Then, he urged his followers to hold firm to the Qur'ān as reflected in Chapter al-Shūra: "Nothing comparable unto Him"¹² and Chapter al-Ikhlaṣ.¹³ These, like many other verses, stressed God's Oneness; a central idea that enforces the absolute core of a Muslim's beliefs. All scrupulous investigators, who recognise Allāh and are counted among His servants, have agreed that all beliefs stem from it; and the chapter, discussing His absolute monotheism,¹⁴ underlines that.¹⁵ He should, thereafter, also believe that Allāh, the Most High is the One who possesses all attributes of perfection. He is the One who Exists, by Himself with everything dependent on His existence, and He is the true Deity, in contrast to [all] false deities. He must also then believe in everything that Allāh revealed to His Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ and what it contains.¹⁶

Regarding the notion of faith that 'there is no god that must be worshipped except Him. One must also believe that He is Eternal without beginning, Who subsists Alone, and Who gives forms to others. He is without beginning and end, and He creates all things and arranges all affairs; these are expressed in the following verses: "But you cannot will, unless Allāh will;" "What is willed by Allāh must occur, and what is not willed by Him, does not occur;" and "Know that Certainly, Allāh has power over all things."¹⁷

In Shaykh Yusuf's Tahsīl al-Ināya wa al-Hidāya, it is stated that the servant must believe in his/her heart that the Messenger of Allāh is absolutely the noblest creature with the most perfect character; he is the most perfect in deed and thought in sharī'ah, and the highest in his tarīqa and the highest in his degree, and so forth. The Prophet ﷺ said: "I am from Allāh and nature is from me." He also said: "I am from the light of Allāh (nūr Allāh) and the universe is from my light." And also: "The first thing created by Allāh was my soul (rūh)." There is no doubt that the person who says and believes that the Messenger of Allāh is God's soul, is an infidel (kaḥfīr); according to the Qur'an, "Allāh, the Exalted, is far above the things they associate with Him." And Allāh said: "I created all things because of you, and I created you because of Me."¹⁸

Turning to the Shaykh's Maṭālib al-Sālikīn (the Quests of the Spiritual Seekers), he stated that tawhīd is likened to a tree with branches and leaves, and gnosis (ma'rifa) represents its branches and leaves, and devotional service or worship ('ibāda), its fruit. If you find a tree, it is probable that you will find branches and leaves, and if this is true, the chances are high that you will find fruit by means of this tree. The opposite holds true as well. If you do not encounter branches and leaves from this tree, it is impossible to expect fruit from this tree. This is a metaphorical example in order that you can understand the true relationship between the concepts of tawhīd, ma'rifat and 'ibāda.

To continue with this parable, tawhīd without ma'rifa or knowledge about Him is like a tree without any branches and leaves. It is then impossible to find fruit on such a tree unless the branches and the leaves of the tree grow out again. In other words, only the one who has tawhīd with ma'rifa, could be expected to perform true worship to God. Further, it is said that one who does not declare His Oneness and unity of Him [waḥdāniyya], is a disbeliever. One who does not know God with ma'rifa is ignorant (jāhil). One who does not practice 'ibāda by worshipping Him is sinful (fāsiq); so, the worship of a disbeliever and an ignorant person, is rejected by God as useless; therefore, God returns it to him.

As for the tawhīd, according to Shaykh Yusuf, there are two types of tawhīd. The first type of tawhīd is the Oneness of Being according to the view of ṣūfī muḥaqqiqīn who say that there is no existence in the visible or external and the unseen or internal forms, except the One Being and One Essence and One Reality. The second type of tawhīd is what is described in the Qur'an Chapter al-Ikhlāṣ, and already known by all Muslims, such as His words: "Say (O Muḥammad ﷺ): 'He is Allāh (the) One. Allāh al-Ṣamad (The Self-Sufficient Master, whom all creatures need), He begets not, nor is He begotten, and there is none co-equal or comparable unto Him'";¹⁹ for this reason, it is called tawhīd al-ikhlāṣ [pure tawhīd] or what Azra described as the immaculate tawhīd.²⁰ This tawhīd later developed into the notion of Waḥdat al-Ṣamad.

Ma'rifa implies that one's beginning is from Him and one's return is (back) to Him, so one's return to Him occurs in exactly the same way as how a person originated from Him; just like water from the sea which flows into a river (after evaporation and precipitation) and returns to the sea from the river. The water does not change from its reality as water. In other words, ma'rifa about the existence of God means One Who reconciles two contradictory attributes, such as He is the Beginning and the Last. So, He is the First, as He is the Last. In addition, God is believed to be the Outward or Exterior (al-Zāhir) and the Inner or Inward (al-Bāṭin); the One who gives guidance (Al-Hadī), but also the One who leads humans astray (al-Muḍill). However, He will not be changed from His reality as the One Essence with all those attributes. This reminds us of the words of ṣūfīs:

مَنْ عَرَفَ نَفْسَهُ فَقَدْ عَرَفَ رَبَّهُ

"Whoever knows himself will know His Lord"

It seems that this teaching asked us to know ourselves before we know our Lord. How can we know our Lord that He is One with all His Names, His Attributes, and His Deeds without first knowing ourselves? Therefore, without this knowledge, we will never reach this station (maqām), and this is the true teaching.

As for 'ibāda (worship) in obedience to His Wahdat al-Wujūd [the Oneness of His existence]; that is, there is no existence but His. And He, Glory be to Him and Exalted, is One and has no partner in existence. The linguistic meaning of 'ubūdiyya is obedience of something to something else. Providing parables have been a strategy of Shaykh Yusuf; so, he said that worship in the sense of obeying the Oneness of His existence is like your body obeying your soul only. This obedience can only be achieved by obeying the unity of the soul.

In reality, one's body worships one's essence; and one's essence is worshipped. So, one's essence is a worshipper ('ābid) from the outside; and it is worshipped (ma'būd) from the inside because the command comes from the soul and goes back to it. If an individual annihilates one's existence and the existence of things other than Allāh; and one knows that all entities other than Allāh are non-existent, one will not see anything but Him and nothing with remain except Him. "Nothing is for you [but for Allāh] is the decision."²¹ So, He becomes a devotee ['ābid] from the perspective of the Divine Command being from Him. And He is an object of worship (ma'būd) from the perspective of the Divine Command [amr] returning to Him.

Therefore, anyone who knows the reality of tawhīd, ma'rifa, and 'ubūdiyya is a gnostic who asserts the Unity of God and an obedient slave ['ārif, muwaḥḥid, and muṭī'ī]; if not, he/she is nothing. Whoever desires a [spiritual] path to Allāh should first understand these words, and then follow the path to Allāh through this method. That means, it is incumbent on the spiritual seeker firstly to commence with denying the existence of beings other than Allāh through cognizance. Once he/she has denied his/her existence and the existence of beings other than Allāh cognitively, he/she will succeed in denying his/her existence and the existence of entities other than Allāh visibly (in his/her inward sight). Then he/she passes from this negation pertaining to the knowledge of negation and attains complete annihilation in Allāh and subsistence [baqā'] with Him.

He repeatedly used parables; he said, for example, that it is like the moth or butterfly when it hurls its soul in a lamp and it is consumed thereby. We do not say: "Has the moth or butterfly become a flame or has it become non-existent." Rather, we say it is now one with the lamp because before it cast its soul [into the flame], it was veiled [mahjūb] from the flame. When it cast its soul into the flame, it combined [with it] and became one with it. Likewise, the spiritual seeker is veiled before negating his/her existence and the existence of things other than Allāh. And when his/her existence and the existence of beings other than Allāh is denied, it combines and unites with Allāh [in the inner view].

Therefore, 'ibāda [the Stage of Worship] is obedience to the Oneness of God [and the exclusion of others], which is done sincerely and wholeheartedly until annihilation (fanā) and permanency (baqā) is achieved with Him. This is the real fruit and the result of spiritual seeker's journey on the path to Allāh. In reality, however, this stage cannot be reached without first attaining the stages of tawhīd and ma'rifa. In other words, all his teaching in his Maṭālib al-Sālikīn treatise includes tawhīd as a leafy tree, ma'rifatas its branches and leaves, and 'ibāda as its fruit. Its practitioners are directed to the Oneness of God and to none other. The peak of maqām 'ubūdiyya is called maqām al-'Ubūdīyyat al-Muṭlaqa [the Absolute Servitude] which is the highest station for a slave before God. One who has reached this station could be called al-Insān al-Kāmil [the perfect person or universal person]. Above this maqām is only maqām Rubūbiyya (Divine station), which is owned by God Himself.

Al-Makassarī said with regard to the ṣūfī orders: There are many paths to Allāh as one of the gnostics said: “the pathways to Allāh are as numerous as the breaths of all created beings but the nearest, the highest and the most connected to the quests of these [paths] to Allāh is the path in which the spiritual seeker intends to reach the Essence of Allāh, the Exalted, with no attention to the other and otherness.”²² Then, he quoted the following verse:

فَلْ هَٰذِهِ سَبِيلِي أَدْعُو إِلَى اللَّهِ عَلَىٰ بَصِيرَةٍ أَنَا وَمَنِ اتَّبَعْتَنِي وَسُبْحَانَ اللَّهِ وَمَا أَنَا مِنَ الْمُشْرِكِينَ

“Say: this is my Way – I do invite you to Allāh with certain knowledge, I and those who follow me. Glory be to Allāh! And I will never join partners with Allāh” (Q., 12:108).

This verse is interpreted by al-Alūsī as da‘wa in the path of Allāh with clear arguments and not blindly. Then Al-Makassarī quoted the following ḥadīth: “My heart is between the two fingers from among the Fingers of the Most Merciful Who can change it as He pleases.”

Figure 1: Tawhid

He discussed tawhīd, ma‘rifatand ‘ibāda with clear arguments and interesting parables. In addition, He reminded us that we must keep our hearts (which are very close with Him) and our beliefs in Allāh, the Most Beneficent, and the Most Merciful by always remembering Him and asking for His assistance because He can change the hearts of women/men as He pleases. This message show the important of remembrance or dhikr is in this life.

5.1 His *Wahdat al-Ṣamad*²³

Unity of all Creatures’ dependence (or the Unity of One who fulfils all His creatures needs) in the sense of the concentration of dependent feelings of all inner consciousness on the Oneness of God, because He is Allāh, the One God Whom all creatures need, and then simplified to be the Unity of Dependence. This was popularised by Shaykh Yusuf al-Makassarī and as a response to his tawhīd Wāḥdat al-Wujūd (which is different from ittiḥād Abū Yazīd al-Bistāmī, al-Hūlūl of Al-Ḥallāj, and Wāḥdat al-Wujūd of ibn ‘Arabī as well as Waḥdat al-Shuhūd of al-Sirhindī) and tawhīd al-Ikhlās or the immaculate tawhīd. His ma’rifat in this instance also refers to the Oneness of God, either ma’rifat al-Dhāt, ma’rifat al-ism and al-ṣifa as well as to ma’rifat al-af’āl. Then his worship is also intended to the Oneness of God without turning to others and otherness as has been discussed in his maqām ‘ubudīyya or the stage of worship. He made sure that he presented a clear argument and not argue blindly about the position of servant and Lord as well as the relationship between this universe with Lord.

According to Shaykh Yusuf, what happens to the gnostic at certain moments, such as when God ‘descends’ [tanazzul] while the servant ascends (taraqqī), is a spiritual process that brings them closer together (or united, annihilated in فناء or having attained permanency in baqā). This spiritual process is likened to a lightning flash that rarely lasts long, so as soon as the moment passes, the servant’s feeling returns to the general level of remembrance; he is conscious again of himself and his God. This servant remains in the remembrance of Allāh in order that he always remains a part of the *ahl al-dhikr*²⁴ In the end, the servant remains the servant (al-‘abd ‘abd) and God remains God (al-Rabb Rabb). When both al-Ghazālī (d.1111) and Shaykh Yusuf expressed their inner-feelings, they never issued blasphemous words because both regarded those expressions as mistakes that were never uttered by the Prophet ﷺ. This is the mistake in terms of expression, not in terms of gnosis (ma’rifat) until the phases of annihilation in Allāh or attaining permanency with Him are attained.

However, free from the similarities and differences among his views with other previous ṣūfīs’s views belonging to this school, it seems that al-Makassarī tries to mediate and reconcile among them by completing their arguments through his arguments in Wājib al-Wujūd that do not imagine the slave to be the master in relation to the physical body because their existence is the existence of one granted this status and it implies the existence of a real endower of such status. Moreover, the slave has no existence by him/herself as everything results from the existence of Allāh. The slave must also not surmise that Allāh dwells in him/her in a way that they retain their separate identities or that He merges with him/her. Both these states presuppose dual existence in the universe which is impossible for Allāh.

As regards such duality, Allāh declares: "Say, o prophet, that He, Allāh, is one. Allāh is independent. He neither procreated nor was He procreated. And there is nothing equal to Him".²⁵ "He is the being who neither adopted a son nor does He have any partner in His sovereignty".²⁶ "He is the first and the last, the manifest and the concealed."²⁷ Then to avoid a long debate between both, finally, he closed the discussion on this issue with the words that a servant is a servant, although he/she ascends and he/she is characterised by God’s characters or attributes, and God is God, although He descends to His servant and is characterised by servant’s characters. This is because His manifestation on one being or His unveiling on His servant is not by fusion or infusion or incarnation or union. He has no shape and limits.

If Ibn-al-Arabi’s theory of Waḥdat al-Wujūd can be interpreted as pantheistic philosophy which acknowledges God’s physical presence in all things material or created, and which refers to the immanence of God, then Waḥdat al-Shuhūd of Sirhindī is vice versa; and it refers to the transcendence of God.²⁸ So, Waḥdat al-Wujūd and Waḥdat al-Shuhūd within the Waḥdat al-Ṣamad of al-Makassarī could be considered as a form of panentheism that tried to reconcile both. According to Shaykh Yusuf, one must believe that God is beyond the universe; and that He is the Greatest as He is the One Whose identity [Huwīyya] infiltrates everything [all existences] with no Hulūl [incarnation] and no ittihād [union]. He, Glory be to Him, encompasses all things (with His knowledge and His Knowledge is His attributes and His attributes and His essence are one; therefore, everything in His knowledge scope) and His identity - Who is One with all His Perfect attributes - is together with everything. He has Power above all His servants; and He wins and never fails, and there is nothing comparable unto Him.²⁹

In this regard, he tried to confirm in his Sirr al-Asrār that our belief in Allāh, the Exalted, must be located between absolute affirmation of the Divine Transcendence and absolute Immanence, meaning that we affirm His Divine Transcendence without denying His attributes and we affirm His Immanence without comparing Him with anyone. We affirm His Divine Transcendence in the situation of Immanence and affirm His Immanence in the situation of Divine Transcendence because the position of absolute Divine Transcendence leads to negligence and negligence is something which does not have limits. The same applies to the position of absolute Immanence for it leads to extravagant behaviour which transgresses all boundaries.³⁰ Therefore, this view is more accurately defined as real and true pantheism. This is one of his reforms to prevent fellow Muslims from false beliefs.

Nevertheless, whatever the differences of his views with other previous ṣūfīs' views, the important fact is that Shaykh Yusuf al-Makassarī only tried to complete the words of previous ṣūfīs with clear arguments and not react blindly in his efforts to reform ṣūfism to correct and avoid false beliefs. Therefore, it is not surprising, if he has a title besides his Tāj al-Khalwatī as Walī Quṭb al-Rabbānī wa al-ʿArīf al-Ṣamadānī,³¹ as a great saint of Allāh (a leader of Allāh's saints of his time who has God's attributes), who knows Allāh; a human conduit spiritual power from Allāh as the Supreme Ruler whom all creatures need, through whom this power is distributed in the world. According to A. Ridwan Tahir and Sultan, this title is a gift from our Lord directly through His guidance on the person (the servant of Allāh) and some of his disciples. It is only once a walī quṭb descended by our Lord in each period, and the wālīs or saints are divided into some levels from the highest to the lowest.³²

In principle, each view of the previous ṣūfīs has the truth, although their views also have flaws. Then only one who has reached his God [annihilation in God and subsistence with Him] can feel the truth itself. Therefore, one could follow what he/she considered correct based on his/her point of view. Shaykh Yusuf just tried to straighten out the way someone delivered his/her spiritual experience which could lead someone else astray and ultimately, to avoid false beliefs.

As for the remembrance to our Lord, Shaykh Yusuf, throughout his treatises, advocated mainly three dhikrs: Lā ilāha illā Allāh, Allāh-Allāh and Huwa-Huwa (Hu-Hu or ah-ah) to reach his Lord. This teaching has been practised by his followers up to the present day. In his ṭarīqah, either the Khalwatiyya or Yusufiyya, it is believed that nafs is essentially seen as a single entity, except for the many levels of worldly matters that can influence it, so Al-Makassari maintained that the soul can be either in a state of ammāra, lawwāma or muṭma'inna. These states are related to the teachings of God in the mundane existence of the world because humans were created for doing mu'āmala (social dealings), in addition to worship and ma'rifat. However, rāḍiyya is the state of muṭma'inna which has been sanctified by devotion, and marḍiyya is the gift of God to the muṭma'innat al-rāḍiyya. Both are directly related to the afterlife on the day of Resurrection when there is no physical duty of worship such as ṣalāt and dhikr.

These three dhikrs are uttered to bring the soul from the lower level to the higher level. First, the phrase لا اله الا الله is a reliever of ammāra. Second, الله-الله is a supporter of lawwāma. Third, the pronoun هو-هو is a supporter of muṭma'inna. In other words, the dhikr لا اله الا الله cleanses the soul of ammāra and takes it into lawwāma, the dhikr الله-الله brings the soul from lawwāma to muṭmai'anna, the dhikr هو-هو adorns muṭma'inna with rāḍiya which is pleasing to Him [marḍiyya]; who, after death, will be called to join the congregation which has gained favour in the grave [barzakh], and who will finally be commanded to enter paradise. Dhikr with the phrase لا إله إلا الله, is called awwām dhikr (remembrance of/for the ordinary people) or also called oral dhikr (lisan [tongue]), pronounced as many times as possible but not too loudly. Allāh says:

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ ءَامَنُوا أَذْكُرُوا اللَّهَ ذِكْرًا كَثِيرًا

“O you who believe! Remember Allāh with much remembrance.”³³

The words of Prophet: الله رضى الجابر عن الحاكم وابن ماجه والترمذى رواه الترمذى ولا إله إلا الله. أفضلُ الذِّكْرِ لا إله إلا الله. "The best of dhikr is Lā Ilāha Illā Allāh" (Narrated by al-Tirmidhī, and Ibn Māja and al-Hākim from Jābir (may Allāh be pleased with them)).³⁴

"الله-الله", is called khawās dhikr (remembrance of elite) or also called as qalb dhikr (remembrance in the heart), the heart engages dhikr repeatedly until it becomes peaceful. Allāh says:

أَلَا بِذِكْرِ اللَّهِ تَطْمَئِنُّ الْقُلُوبُ

“Verily in the remembrance of Allāh do hearts find rest.”³⁵

“هو-هو” is called dhikr akhaṣṣ al-khawāṣṣ (remembrance of the elite of elites or the superlative elites) or also called dhikr sirr (remembrance of the innermost recesses), the most soulful dhikr, as mentioned in Ḥadīth Qudsī: مَنْ ذَكَرَنِي فِي نَفْسِهِ ذَكَرْتُهُ فِي نَفْسِي “Whoever remembers Me in his soul, I will remember him in Myself.” Then His words: فَادْكُرُونِي أَذْكُرْكُمْ “Therefore remember Me (by praying, glorifying etc.), I will remember you...”³⁶ and His words: “He is Allāh, then Whom there is lā ilāha illā Huwa (none has the right to be worshipped but He)”.³⁷ When performing dhikr, or remembering God, one must know that God is with His servants according to the Words of God in Surat al-Ḥadīd: وَهُوَ مَعَكُمْ أَيْنَ مَا كُنْتُمْ

“... And He is with you (by His knowledge) wheresoever you may be...”³⁸

Shaykh Yusuf was a reformer in the Muslim spiritual world during the 17th century through his purification of beliefs and his ṣūfism. Having studied in the centre of academic and spiritual networks in and beyond the Arabian Peninsula, al-Makassarī and other Archipelago/Malay-Indonesian scholars from the second half of the 17th century onwards launched conscious, if not concerted, efforts to spread neo-ṣūfism in the Archipelago.

Contrary to the earlier type of ṣūfism which tended to draw ṣūfīs into passivity, neo-ṣūfism preached activism. Involvement in worldly affairs was considered one of the crucial steps toward fulfilment of mystical aspiration. Therefore, it is not surprising that his ṣūfism was more oriented towards the sharī'ah, where he tried hard to reconcile sharī'a (divine law) and ḥaqīqa (divine reality) to the Muslim communities in Gowa-Macassar as well as in Cape of Good Hope.

6. Tawhid's Impeccable Lustre: Al-Makassarī's in Cabo de Goede Hoop and Makassar

All Messengers of Allāh are Prophets, but not all Prophets are His Messengers. All Prophets are Allāh's saints, but not all His saints are Prophets. Likewise, not all pious persons are Allāh's saints and not all His saints are wali quṭb. Then, every one of Allāh's saint brings the light of tawhīd to the world. They are only different in conveying and applying the tawhīd teaching to the Muslim community based on their understanding to it, but all have the same ultimate goal, i.e the great joy in being united with Allāh, especially when they reach fanā' in Allah and baqā' with Him.

Actually, the light of tawhīd's al-Makassarī has appeared since he was still in his mother's womb. At the time, whenever the King of Gowa wanted to approach and touch Yusuf's mother, there was the light of Lā ilāha illā Allāh that radiated and dhikrs heard from his mother's stomach, making the king unable to continue his intention to touch her. Then followed by the big and bright light when he was born in Parangloe, Tallo Palace; they caused the people of Gowa to be surprised and their wish to visit Tallo. The people considered that Tallo was on fire, but it was not. Tallo was saved because of the light.³⁹

These accidents made Yusuf and his mother was more admired and appreciated by the King of Gowa and Tallo. These are God's miracles awarded on Shaykh Yusuf when he was still in his mother's womb and a baby, who later became Allāh's saint even a wālī quṭb. Then the light of a ṣūfī saint appears within him when he could see what will happen in his society later that could not be seen by others at the time, i.e. Gowa will be collapsed if they (especially the nobility) strayed from the guidance of Islam.⁴⁰ Idolatry, worshipping haunted places and customs based on the animistic belief still had strong influence. Furthermore, the habits of cockfighting, gambling, drinking wine, smoking opium were widespread.

Yusuf then suggested that the collapse of society can be prevented by eradicating these items through a royal order from the Honourable King. This would also change the attitudes of the people to treat the great objects of the Kingdom as sacred idols.⁴¹ Nevertheless, the impeccable lustre of the Shaykh's teaching of tawhīd appeared when he had completed his search for knowledge from Macassar to the Arabian Peninsula; and becoming, thereafter, a ṣūfī Shaykh who had taught sūfism in al-Hāram, and later becoming a wālī quṭb. Then, after returning to his homeland, he tried hard to make the Muslim community to be fervent Muslims; ones who have a true belief and who have firm belief in tawhīd by abandoning their bad habits.

Shaykh Yusuf became a good and arguably the best Muslim missionary (dārī) of his time. This is proven by his success in spreading da'wa through his students such as I Kare Nyampa Daeng Ritasammeng and I Daeng Mallolongan to abolish sinful deeds (gambling, cockfighting, alcoholic drinking especially arak/ballo or strong palm wine), and to crush the idols such as saukang, pantasak, anjak and *sallerang*⁴² in Macassar Kingdom.

Shaykh Yusuf did not only conduct oral preaching, but also conveyed da'wa through his acts and writing many works; most of them having been preserved in the State University of Leiden Library and in the National Museum or the National Library of Jakarta.⁴³

One of his students, namely, Shaykh 'Abd al-Baṣīr al-Darīr al-Khalwatī was an Arab; he was a highly knowledgeable blind ṣūfī who was known as Tuan Rappang or Sehetta I Wodi, or the Shaykh from Wodi (a town in Rappang). He, then, continued and spread al-Makassarī's teaching (Khalwatiyya Yusuf) in Macassar and Bugis; he did so until he died in Rappang. Besides him, there was Shaykh Muḥammad Sulṭān Baitullāh; he was one of al-Makassarī's offspring (d.1948) and he continued the teachings of the Yusuḥfiyya ṣūfī order; this was derived from his great-great grandfather Muḥammad Jaylānī bin Yusuf al-Makassarī; and he became the most famous teacher of Khalwatiyyat al-Yusuḥfiyya or

*Yusufiyya Ṣūfi Orders in Gowa.*⁴⁴

Then on the way to Cape of Good Hope, God's miracle occurred again as the result of the impeccable lustre of tawhīd through his dhikrs, as in the following:

“... various traditions... have gathered about his name, and it is commonly believed by those of his creed at the Cape that he performed many miracles. Thus, it is asserted by them that when he was on the passage to this country the fresh water in the ship failed, upon which he dipped his foot in the sea and told the crew to replenish their casks, when to the amazement of all in board that which they took up in buckets was perfectly good to drink.”⁴⁵

“Interestingly and amazingly, when the ship arrived at the Cape beach, all the crews and the Dutch captain eventually embraced Islam. One of the Captain's descendants in Cape is Zubaedah Philander, the wife of Imām Adam Philander.”⁴⁶

The impeccable lustre of his tawhīd played an important role to the socio-political context of his time till today. Firstly, it had a profound effect on his homeland, through his disciples and his long line of descendants. At the time, the Macassar Kingdom had become a great Muslim empire under the rule of Sultan Ḥasan al-Dīn (1659-1670); and it, then, fell into the hands of the Dutch after ‘Bungayya Treaty’ in 1669.

Secondly, it played an important role in the reformation of the Cape Muslim community who managed to avoid the influence of Dutch missionaries; the latter tried to force the locals to become Christian. To this community, the Shaykh's teachings of tawhīd reinforced the Oneness of God. He taught that the Lord who acknowledges human all are the same, either white or black, free or slave person. Then his ṣūfism which is more oriented to the sharī'ah.

The shaykh taught them how to recite al-Qur'ān, how to stand for praying and how to remember our Lord by adhkār and some other litanies. This was the right time and place for him to practise his reform ideas. Although he never mentioned the type of doctrine he was teaching or where it came from, the essence of his teachings and reforms made an undeniable impact on the hearts of the Cape community; and he succeeded in building a true Muslim community at the Cape during a short time.

Today, the impeccable lustre of his tawhīd teaching spread via various forms of awrād (litanies) in both regions. The Ratib ul-Ḥaddād and wīrid al-laṭīf are respectively popular at the Cape and the awrād of Khalwatiyya Yusufiyya in South Sulawesi; both practices are derived from al-Makassarī's teaching. Even the last awrad that have been simplified by his great-great grandson ‘Muḥammad Sultan Baitullāh’ and continued and further developed by his son, ‘Shaykh K. H. Sahib Sultan’ in Gowa, South Sulawesi spread it across present-day Indonesia; it, however, was also spread in South Africa. These awrād (litanies, including du'a, ṣalawāt, dhikrs, and istiḡhāzah or reciting some of chosen verses of the Qur'an) are impeccable; and they reflect the lustre of al-Makassarī's teachings of tawhīd that are presently shining bright among the communities in both regions. Though these practices are below the radar of the diplomatic ties, they do strengthen the bilateral relations between the two.

7. Bibliography

7.1 Primary Sources

- Al-Maqassarī, Shaykh Yusuf. n.d. Baḥr al-Lāhūt [Ocean of Divine Nature]. Microfilm of MSKBG 108 F Or A 13b [20]. Leiden: Universiteitsbibliotheek.
- Al-Maqassarī, S.Y. n.d. Sirr al-Asrār [The Secret of Secrets]. Manuscript submitted for publication in Arabic Manuscripts Or 5706: 3-17 as well as Arabic Manuscript Or 7025 [3]: 67-104, and Microfilms of MSKBG 101 F Or A 13d [8] and MSKBG 101 F Or A 13b [10]. Leiden: Universiteitsbibliotheek.
- Al-Maqassarī, S.Y. n.d. Šūra [The Image (of Tawḥīd)]. Microfilm of MSKBG 108 F Or A 13b [24a]. Leiden: Universiteitsbibliotheek.
- Al-Maqassarī, S.Y. n.d. Taḥsīl al-‘Ināya wa al-Hidāya [The Implication of Help and Guidance or the Acquisition of Divine Providence and Guidance]. Microfilm of MSKBG 108 F Or A 13b [8]. Leiden: Universiteitsbibliotheek.
- Al-Maqassarī, S.Y. (1186 AH/1772 AD). Maṭālib al-Sālikīn [The Quest of the Spiritual Seekers]. Microfilms of MSKBG 101 F Or A 13d [7] and MSKBG 108 F Or A 13b [3]. Leiden: Universiteitsbibliotheek.
- Al-Maqassarī, S.Y. (1186 AH/1772 AD). Tuḥfat al-Abrār li Ahl al-Asrār [The gift of the Good Ones to the People of Secrets or the Gift of the Pious to the People of Secrets]. Microfilm of MSKBG 101 F Or A 13d [9]. Leiden: Universiteitsbibliotheek.
- Al-Maqassarī, S.Y. (1186 AH./1772 AD). Zubdat al-Asrār fī Taḥqīq Ba‘ḍi Mashārib al-Akhyār [The Essence of Secrets in Investigating Some Drinking Places of the Chosen Ones]. Manuscript submitted for publication in Arabic Manuscript Or 7025 [2]; and Microfilms of MSKBG 101 F Or A 13d [2], MSKBG 108 F Or A 13b [32]. Leiden: Universiteitsbibliotheek.
- Al-Maqassarī, S.Y. (1216 AH/1801 AD). Al-Nafḥat al-Saylāniyya [Providential Gift: a Breeze from Ceylon or the Ceylonese Fragrance]. Microfilm of MSKBG 101 F Or A 13d [1]. Leiden: Universiteitsbibliotheek.
- Al-Maqassarī, S.Y. (1222 AH/1806 AD). Al-Barakat al-Saylāniyya [The Blessing from Ceylon/The Ceylonese Blessings]. Microfilm of MSKBG 108 F Or A 13b [5]. Leiden: Universiteitsbibliotheek.

7.2 Secondary Data

- Abdullah, H. 1930. Perkembangan Tashawwuf dan Tokoh-Tokohnya di Nusantara. Surabaya: al-Ikhlās.
- Al-Tirmidhī, Muḥammad b. Abū ‘Isa. 1975. Sunan Tirmidhī. Cairo: Muṣṭafa al-Bābī al-Ḥalabī.

- Asba, A. Rasyid. 2008. Syekh Yūsuf dalam Perspektif Historiografi Sulawesi Selatan. Paper presented at Gowa Regency Office on July 4. Gowa: Sungguminasa.
- Azra, Azyamurdi. 1992. The Transmission of Islamic Reformism to Indonesian: Networks of Middle Eastern Malay-Indonesian "Ulama" in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries. Unpublished Doctoral Dissertation. Columbia University, UMI.
- Daeng Magassing, Nuruddin. 1933. Riwayatna Tuanta Salamaka Sehe Yūsufu. Makassar: Volkedrukkerij.
- Dangor, Suleman Essop. 1995. Sirr al-Asrār. The Secret of Secrets by Shaykh Yusuf. Durban: Centre for Research in Islamic Studies, University of Durban-Westville.
- Dangor, S.E. 1994. In the footstep of the Companions: Shaykh Yūsuf of Makassar (1626-1699). In Pages from Cape Muslim History (Eds. Yusuf da Costa and Achmat Davids). Pietermaritzburg: Shuter & Shooter, pp. 19-46.
- Hamka. 1963. Dari Perbendaharaan Lama. Medan: Maju.
- Ibn Māja, Abū ‘Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Yazīd al-Qazwīnī. 1952. Sunan. (Ed. Muḥammad Fu‘ād ‘Abd al-Bāqī). Beirut: ‘Isā al-Bābī al-Halabī. 2 vols.
- Lubis, Nabilah. 1996. Syeikh Yusuf al-Taj Al-Makassari. Menyingkap Intisari Segala Rahasia. Bandung: Fakultas Sastra Universitas Indonesia & Ecole Franchaise of Extrême Orient Mizan.
- Noorduyn, Jacobus. 1972. Islamisasi Makassar. Djakarta: Bhatara.
- Ramly, Andi Muawiyah. 2006. Demi Ayat Tuhan. Upaya KPPSI menegakkan Syariat Islam. Jakarta: Open Society Institute (OPSI).
- Sahib, Muzdalifah. 2019. Shaykh Yūsuf al-Makassarī's literary contribution with a special attention to his Maṭālib al-Sālikīn [The Quests of the Spiritual Seekers]. Unpublished PhD Thesis. UNISA.
- Sibali, M. B. 1989. Syeikh Yusuf Tuwanta Salamaka. Ulama Pejuang Abad ke 17. Jakarta: Departemen Pendidikan dan Kebudayaan.
- Sultan, Sahib. 2019/2020. Awrad (Wirid-Wrid) Khalwatiyyah Yusufiyyah. Unpublished Book. Sunnguminasa-Gowa.
- Sultan, Sahib. 2016. Syeikh Yusuf Tuanta Salamaka. Ulama Sufi, Pejuang Abad ke17 dan Pahlawan Nasional Dua Negara. Edisi Revisi. Makassar: Yayasan Almahasin.
- Sultan, Sahib. 1982. Penilaian dan Penghargaan Masyarakat Gowa terhadap Shaykh Yūsuf. Skripsi (Scription). UIN Alauddin: Ujungpandang.

Theal, G. McCall. 1909. History of South Africa III, Vol. II of 3 vols. In History and Ethnography of Africa South of the Zembesi, London: Swan Sonnenschein.

Tudjimah. 1997. Shaykh Yūsuf Makassar Riwayat dan Ajarannya. Jakarta: Universitas Indonesia Press.

7.3 Primary Data and Online Reference

7.3.1 Personal Interviews

Hartley, Moeghamat Gielmie (25 June 2019). About the belief of the Cape communities such as the Khoi-Khoi and the San who were described as animists. Personal Interview.

Philander, Imam Adam. (25 April 2017). About all the crews and the Dutch captain of the Voet Bough ship who brought Shaykh Yūsuf from Ceylon to Cabo de Goede Hoop (Cape of Good Hope) eventually embraced Islam. Personal Interview.

Tahir, A. Ridwan & Sultan (10 May 2019). The term of a walī qutb. Personal Interview.

7.3.2 Other Personal Communication

Rafudeen, M. A. (13 April, 2017). Tuḥfat al-abrār li ahl al-asrār or the Gift of Goodness to the People of Innermost Secrets. E-mail to Muzdalifah Sahib.

Rafudeen, M. A. (14 February, 2017). Al-Nafḥat al-Saylāniyya fī al-Minḥat al-Raḥmāniyya [Providential Gift: A Breeze from Ceylon]. E-mail to Muzdalifah Sahib.

Rafudeen, M. A. (17 February, 2017). Wājib al-Wujūd [The Essential and Indispensable Existence]. E-mail to Muzdalifah Sahib.

7.3.3 Online References

https://www.irfi.org/articles3/articles_4801_4900/ibn arabi and or https://familyofheart.com/05/June0505/Farzana_Hassan.htm

Endnotes

¹ Qur'an:112: 1-4.

²For more information refers to Muzdalifah Sahib. 2019. Shaykh Yūsuf al-Makassarī's literary contribution with a special attention to his Maṭālib al-Sālikīn [The Quests of the Spiritual Seekers]. Unpublished PhD Thesis. UNISA.

³Nuruddin Daeng Magassing.1933. Riwayatna Tuanta Salamaka Sehe Yustufu. Makassar: Volkedrukkerij.

⁴ A. Muawiyah Ramli. 2006. Demi Ayat Tuhan. Upaya KPPSI menegakkan Syariat Islam. Jakarta: OPSI (Open Society Institute). p.74.

⁵ Hawas Abdullah. 1930. Perkembangan Tashawwuf dan Tokoh-Tokohnya di Nusantara. Surabaya: al-Ikhlās: p.77.

⁶Al-Makassarī in al-Nafḥāt al-Saylāniyya, 1116c. A.H.:25; see also the Azymardi Azra. 1992. Transmission of Islamic Reformism to Indonesian: Networks of Middle Eastern Malay-Indonesian “Ulama” in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries. Unpublished Doctoral Dissertation. Columbia University: p.421.

⁷M. Gielmie Hartley, personal communications 18 April 2021.

⁸See also Hamka (1963). Dari Perbendaharaan lama. Medan: Maju.

⁹See Suleman Dangor. 1994. ‘In the Footstep of the Companions: Shaykh Yusuf of Makassar (1626-1699). In Pages from Cape Muslim History (Edited by Yusuf da Costa and Achmat Davids). Pietermaritzburg: Shuter & Shooter. pp.19-46.

¹⁰See al-Maqassarī in Zubdat al-Azrār; see also Syeikh Yusuf al-Taj Al-Makassari. Menyingkap Intisari Segala Rahasia. Bandung: Fakultas Sastera Universitas Indonesia & Ecole Franchise of Extrême Orient Mizan by Lubis (1996).

¹¹See al-Maqassarī in Tuḥfat al-abrār li ahl al-asrār, see also M.A. Rafudeen, personal communication on 13 April, 2017.

¹²*Qur’an* 42:11.

¹³*Qur’an* 112:1-4.

¹⁴As illustrated in Qur’ān Ch.112.

¹⁵See al-Makassarī in al-Nafḥāt al-Saylāniyya and Zubdat al-Azrār; see also M.A. Rafudeen, personal communication on 14 February, 2017 and Lubis (2016).

¹⁶See al-Makassarī in Tuḥfat al-Abrār li Ahl al-Asrār, see also M.A. Rafudeen, personal communication on 13 April, 2017.

¹⁷*Quran* 76:30; 2: 20, and 3: 165; and see al-Makassarī in al-Barkat al-Saylāniyya and in al-Nafḥāt al-Saylāniyya, see also Azra (1992).

¹⁸*Qur’an* 52:43. For more information about the light of Muḥammad and all His creations see also al-Maqassarī in Baḥr al-Lahūt or the Ocean of Divine Nature; and see also Tudjimah (1997: 95) in Shaykh Yūsuf Makassar Rīwayāt dan Ajarannya. Universitas Indonesia (UI Press): Jakarta.

¹⁹*Quran* Ch. 112.

²⁰Azra 1992: 440.

²¹*Qur’an* 3:128.

²²For more information, refers to the meaning of his Maṭālib al-Sālikīn on p. 9 to 10 in Muzdalifah’s Thesis (2019)

²³This term is derived from the word Waḥdat al-Ṣamadiyya in one of his treatises, namely al-Nafḥāt al-Saylāniyya page 28, lines 11.

²⁴Syeikh Yusuf Tuanta Salamaka. Ulama Sufi, Pejuang Abad ke17 dan Pahlawan Nasional Dua Negara. Edisi Revisi. Makassar: Yayasan Almahasin by Sahib Sultan (2016).

²⁵*Qur’an* Ch. 112.

²⁶*Qur’an* 25: 2.

²⁷M.A. Rafudeen, personal communication on 17 April, 2017.

²⁸For more information, refers to Muzdalifah’s Thesis (2019) see also Farzana Hassan-Shahid (2005) in https://www.irfi.org/articles3/articles_4801_4900/ibn_arabi_and_...._or_http://familyofheart.com/05/June0505/Farzana_Hassan.htm.

²⁹*Qur’an* 42: 11 and Al-Maqassarī in his Maṭālib al-Sālikīn and Zubdat al-Asrār; see also the image of tawḥīd in his book entitled Ṣūra.

³⁰*Ṣirr al-Asrār. The Secret of Secrets by Shaykh Yusuf*. Durban: Centre for Research in Islamic Studies, University of Durban-Westville by Dangor (1995).

³¹Daeng Maḡassing 1933: 53 & 79.

³²For more information see the arguments of A. Ridwan Tahir, Lc., M.A. Ph.D at Al-Azhar University, personal communication, 10 May 2019 as well as one of the leaders of Khalwatiyya Sammān in West Sulawesi with Sultan.

³³*Qur’an* 33:41.

³⁴ See Sunan al-Tirmidhī and Ibn Māja in Muzdalifah's Thesis (2019); see also 'Awrād (Wirid-Wrid) Khalwatiyyah Yusufiyah' by Sahib Sultan (2019/2020).

³⁵ Qur'an 13:28.

³⁶ Qur'an 2:152.

³⁷ Qur'an 59: 22.

³⁸ Qur'an 57: 4.

³⁹ See also Syekh Yusuf dalam Perspektif Historiografi Sulawesi Selatan. Paper presented at Gowa Regency Office on July 4. Gowa: Sungguminasa by A. Rasyid Asba (2008).

⁴⁰ For more information, refers to Muzdalifah's Thesis (2019).

⁴¹ It is important to know that Yusuf had no problem with the Great Objects of the Kingdom themselves, but he did not like how the nobles of the Gowa Kingdom and their people treated or worshipped these objects as sacred idols; as if they, by themselves, could bring harm or be of benefit for the Kingdom and its people. We know that Shaykh Yusuf only believed in the Oneness of God and for him, only God could bring harm and benefit to His creation, not others or objects. Therefore, as the first strategy to prevent the collapse of the Kingdom, he suggested that the royal families and the people keep and appreciate these royal objects, with the stipulation that these things were only objects and not sacred. See also Syekh Yusuf Tuwanta Salamaka. Ulama Pejuang Abad ke 17. Jakarta: Departemen Pendidikan dan Kebudayaan by M.B. Sibali (1989).

⁴² Anjak (small beds which are put in the top floor of the house that are considered as the resting place of their ancestor's soul, who can help or disturb if he was not worshipped or given ritual offerings). Saukang (the houses which are built in the middle of the jungle or at the edge of the village, near to the big trees, as a place for giving ritual offerings to their ancestor). Pantasak and Sallerang (both of them are the same category of sacrifices with Anjak. They are only different in forms, Pantasak are small houses and Sallerang is a quadrangle net that was made of yellow bamboo; see Penilaian dan Penghargaan Masyarakat Gowa terhadap Syekh Yūsuf. Skripsi (Scriptio). UIN Alauddin: Ujungpandang by Sahib Sultan (1982).

⁴³ <https://www.library.universiteitleiden.nl/> and <https://www.perpusnas.go.id/?lang=en>

⁴⁴ See also Mengenal dan Memahami Tarekat-Tarekat Muktabarah di Indonesia. Jakarta: Prenada Media by Sri Mulyati (2004).

⁴⁵ See History of South Africa III, Vol. II of 3 vols. In History and Ethnography of Africa South of the Zembesi, London: Swan Sonnenschein by Theal, McCall, G. (1909).

⁴⁶ Adam Philander, personal communication, 25 April 2017.

Notes: All al-Makassarī's treatises used here are from MSKBG 101 and 108 of UB Leiden.

CHAPTER FIVE

Shaykh Yūsuf's Al-Nafḥa Al-Ṣaylānīyyah fi l-Minḥa Al-Raḥmānīyya:

A Fountain of Spiritual Values

Yousuf Dadoo

Abstract

This chapter falls within the purview of Islamic ethics and spirituality. While it primarily concentrates on the development of the afore-mentioned fields at an individual level, its influence on collective practices is nevertheless incontrovertible. After this preamble, I briefly expound its components from the writings of spiritual luminaries like Al-Jīlānī, Al-Ghazālī and Shāh Wali Allāh; these are in addition to the findings of scholars such as Al-Jāhīz, Al-Fārābī, Al-Miskawayh, and Ibn Sīnā. In broad terms, these themes belong mainly to the mystical path (ṭarīqah) while also broaching the path of venerated mystical reality (ḥaqīqa). For identifying and scrutinising these concepts in his treatise, Al-Nafḥa Al-Ṣaylānīyyah, I apply Critical Discourse Analysis (CDA). As a result, the discursive choice of certain linguistic devices, implicatures, and generic conventions are foregrounded which establish this text as a specimen of Sunni mystical-cum-ethical thought. It also reflects relations of (soft) power through influence exercised by the author on his readers. For this analysis, the views of Van Dijk in his Discourse and Society are particularly helpful. Significantly, while Shaykh Yūsuf emerges as a practitioner of power, he often reminds his readers that he is merely an intermediary for accessing Divine directives and power. Finally, I devote attention to his legacy as explained by Seraj Hendricks, Muzdalifah Sahib, and Muhaemin Latif.

Keywords: Shaykh Yusuf, Al-Nafha al-Saylaniyyah, Mystical Tradition, Ethical Values, Critical Discourse Analysis.

1. Introduction

This chapter falls within the purview of Islamic ethics and spirituality. Ebrahim Moosa¹ comments that the discipline of Muslim ethics – which is a term he uses acrimoniously as shown by the interrogation point following the article's caption – has several synonymous nomenclatures in Muslim culture among which are 'ilm al-akhlāq (science of inner dispositions), sulūk (comportment) and taṣawwuf (mysticism). Its scope is restricted almost entirely to the formation of individual practices. Scholars like Dirāz have, however, assigned a broader role to this discipline by also including details about family life, society, state, and Divine obligations. After these preliminary remarks about the scope of Islāmic ethics, we underline the components of mysticism on account of their relevance to our topic.

1.1 Muslim mystical tradition

Shāh Wali Allāh (d.1763) explains that Islam has two facets, the exoteric and the esoteric. The external feature secures welfare for society by legislating appropriate legislation while the internal component cultivates the minds and hearts of people. After the demise of the Prophet ﷺ, responsibility for protecting the outward sharī'ah fell to jurists, authorities of the Qur'ān and Sunna, as well as warriors. The inward dimension that secures certainty about being in the Divine presence, termed ihsān, was safeguarded by saints. Both groups are always found in Muslim communities.

Among the first priorities of internal reformers was the moral regeneration of people. Their impeccable character made them the focal points of their communities. People cherished being associated with them with the aim of having their prayers answered by Allāh. Sometimes, miraculous feats (karāmāt) were witnessed at their hands.

There are several paths (turuq) to Allāh. During the time of Junaid (d.910), this practice came to be known as taṣawwuf. He formalised most of its rules, and these became the fountainhead of this praxis. We now consider cardinal issues of this endeavour below.

Correct faith is essential; and this must always be aligned to the teachings of Prophet Muḥammad's ﷺ immediate followers (ṣaḥāba) and the generation (tābi'ūn) succeeding them. Its cardinal principle according to Islam is obedience to all dictates and abstention from (types of) sin. Obedience undergirds taṣawwuf and ihsān. It also comprises the performance of specific activities like Divine remembrance (dhikr), Qur'ān's recitation (tilāwa), obligatory prayers (ṣalāt), and optional prayers (nawāfil). At this stage, the aspirant must take time to learn some lessons from foundation scriptures while disciplining the routines of eating and sleeping.

Dhikr must be done with utmost Divine love while being immersed in a state of ecstasy and selflessness. Eventually, the postulant feels tranquillity that draws him/her away from worldly concerns and focuses on Divine love. To enhance this experience, this candidate must reflect on Divine attributes or visualise him/herself in the throes of death. Introspection assists the person to witness things beyond the realm of tangible things and to concentrate purely on Allāh who becomes the ultimate focus. In due course, the Divine being appears before the aspirant while all his/her faculties and organs gain the ability to verbalise. All barriers between the individual and Allāh disappear. Successively, he/she acquires unity with Him at the levels of Divine acts, Divine names and finally, at the level of the Divine being.

Al-Jīlānī (d.1166) sheds further light on this spiritual journey. For him, taṣawwuf entails honesty with Allāh and a sterling character with His creation. The aspirant must refrain from associating with negligent people. Further, he/she must be generous and endure adversity. The individual must repose absolute faith in Divine forgiveness and protection against future wrongdoings. Assisting the poor and love for spiritual divines are essential. In the process, the aspirant's ardent love is so intense that it despises all other splendour. This person only speaks out of necessity, exhorts him/herself, advises others, and enjoys Divine company. This elevated person speaks with Divine wisdom; and he/she utters Divine mysteries after receiving sanction to do so.

According to the above exposition, mysticism and ethics are intertwined. The résumé below will explain the importance of ethics from a predominantly social angle, which will show some overlaps with mystical teachings.

1.2 Ethical tradition

It begins with a definition of khuluq made by the literary figure, theologian, and polemicist, Al-Jāhīz (d.868) thus: "It is a state of the soul which allows a person to act in spontaneous ways². For some persons, it is instinctive while for others it only occurs with practice" (Al-Jāhīz, 1989: 12). This definition is quoted verbatim by later scholars like Miskawaih³ and Ibn ‘Arabī⁴. Rāghib Al-İşfahānī (d.1108) explains⁵ that khuluq refers to both instinctive and acquired conduct. The capacity to alter it will depend upon which view a person ascribes to.

As per the categories listed by Plato, Al-Jāhīz identifies⁶ three faculties residing among humans: the mental/intellectual/rational, the irascible and the bestial. A balance among them produces virtues while shortages or excesses within them create vices. Al-Fārābī (d.950) regards the capacity to perform good deeds as virtues, and vice versa. The balance in traits ensures spiritual health. Virtues are either ethical or intellectual. The latter include qualities like wisdom and perspicacity, while the former include courage, generosity, and justice.

Justice is distributive in society through achieving peace and creating honour among people.⁷ For Al-İşfahānī, it entails equality. Sometimes, it is used as shorthand for all virtues while, at other times, it is regarded as the supreme virtue which is applied for both its intrinsic value as well as for other considerations.⁸ It regulates the other three faculties mentioned earlier.⁹ The aim of any virtue is to attain good for its own sake, not for any other objective. But it is difficult for any person to be endowed with all virtues.¹⁰

As stated previously, these scholars were never oblivious to the spiritual reward for ethical conduct. Ibn Sīnā observes¹¹:

“Anyone concerned about matters of the soul, desiring to know its virtues and ways of acquiring them ... and needing to travel the most arduous journey so that his nature may redeem its right to the perfection that is prepared for the pleasures of both this worldly and eternal life, must harness his theoretical capacity ... as well as his practical power through virtues based on self-restraint, courage, wisdom and justice ...”.

Miskawaih¹² provides the finest classification of virtues whose details are given hereafter. The sharī‘a habituates people to acceptable deeds, and it prepares them to accept wisdom and seek virtue; in addition, one attains pleasure through correct thought and judgement. There are four primary virtues: wisdom, restraint, courage, and justice. Justice is a virtue of the rational self. It becomes aware of all Divine and human conduct and decides any course of action. Restraint is a virtue of the carnal self, which allows a person to distinguish matters in a way that prevents that individual from becoming a slave to his/her passion. Bravery is a virtue of the irascible self, and it manifests itself in terms of how it submits to the rational self. Justice combines all three of the virtues mentioned above, and it submits them to the faculty of discernment. All virtues contain sub-categories that are detailed hereafter:

- Wisdom: wit, retentive memory, contemplation, ability to swiftly grasp, clear mind and ease of learning;
- Restraint: modesty, humility, patience, generosity, suitable response to earning and spending, contentment, swiftness to beauty, organisation, guidance, peace, dignity, and graceful conduct;
- Bravery: disdaining triviality, self-composure, resolve, steadfastness, forbearance, tranquillity, eagerness to perform huge tasks and enduring toil;
- Generosity: spending huge amounts with ease, sacrificing personal needs, contentment with performance of huge tasks, assistance to friends and worthy people, liberality, and foregoing essentials; and

- Justice: honesty, love, preserving blood ties, compensation, fairness in transactions, sound judgement, Divine worship, exemplary service to the extended family, partners, and friends.

All these virtues are a mean between two extreme evils; for instance, wisdom lies between foolishness and stupidity. Foolishness here means inappropriate use of intellect while stupidity means its deliberate disuse. Likewise, self-restraint is the mean between overzealous commitment and total inactivity when satisfying pleasures. Considering the foregoing review, we could identify the centrepieces of Islāmic spirituality and ethics to be firm, correct faith in Allāh, observance of appropriate prayers and rituals to attain His proximity, and a sterling character for scrupulous conduct with creation.

After this encapsulation, we concentrate on the text of Shaykh Yūsuf's Al-Nafḥa Al-Ṣaylānīyyah fi l-Minḥa Al-Raḥmānīyya to determine the extent to which it reflects Islamic mysticism and ethics.

2. The Manuscript: Al-Nafḥa Al-Ṣaylānīyyah fi l-Minḥa Al-Raḥmānīyya

Preamble: Besides identifying themes in this text, which is hereafter referred to as Al-Nafḥa, power relations within it are examined to ascertain their role in mystical discourses. For this purpose, principles of Critical Discourse Analysis (hereafter referred to as CDA) outlined by Teun van Dijk¹³ are employed. Its cardinal points are summarised below.

Manifestation of power relations in a text is natural or legitimate. Power involves control either over people's cognition or behaviour for which rhetorical methods of persuasion are used. They assume the form of direct commands or a style that conceals power relations by using certain linguistic devices, implicatures, and generic conventions besides manipulating recipients' minds through knowledge, understanding and ideologies. Essentially, they display dominance relations by some authority as they are reproduced in texts. Power relations may be deemed legitimate or illegitimate. The latter type is called dominance. People are influenced to accept such dominance and act on behalf of the powerful through a process called hegemony.

While texts are studied from the perspective of those who suffer from prejudice, discrimination, and marginalisation, personal power is enacted as an individual realization of group power, which in turn, is based on privileged access to socially valued resources like knowledge. The public's access to knowledge is conditioned by the social power it possesses.

Even codes and registers in which these discourses occur are determined by powerful groups; for instance, the following questions are pertinent: when, who, and how should a person participate in those events? And what should their agendas be? People lacking social power are excluded from them or, at best, become passive observers.

The CDA of *Al-Nafḥa*¹⁴ is sub-divided into an analysis of its title, themes, implicatures, general communication strategies, and power relations.

2.1 Title

Its title contains a bipartite, internally rhythmic structure with an end-rhyme of the final two consonants and preceding vowel. This is more graphically illustrated in the Arabic form of the title: المنحة الرحمانية || في المنحة الرحمانية where the underlined portion of the last words displays the rhyme pattern. Furthermore, there is internal rhyme between المنحة in the first part and المنحة in the second, as well as between المنحة in the first portion and الرحمانية in the second. These features accentuate contextual onomatopoeia which will be instantiated in the following two paragraphs. The word نفحة (meaning, a gust of wind) occurs in a long, popular Ḥadīth with reference to the ease and swiftness with which a pious person's soul will leave his/her body at the time of death.¹⁵ The word منحة (referring to the provision of copious amount of milk to benefit a needy person) occurs in a Ḥadīth which provides categories of people deserving charity.¹⁶

A reasonable translation of the title will read “A gush of wind from Ceylon (Sri Lanka) from among Providential gifts”. Based on the signification of the gush of wind, we surmise that it describes the author's optimism; despite his incarceration in forlorn surroundings to which he avers in the text. Or it could be interpreted as his role in propelling the wind of inspiration among people seeking his guidance. Ceylon is the territory from which Divine gifts will scatter to needy mystical aspirants via his writings. Significantly, Shaykh Yūsuf uses the Divine attribute of mercy to stress the centrality of Allāh's grace in his presentation. At the same time, it must be appreciated that the primary gift for the truths enunciated in his text comes from Allāh, as the second half of the title implies.

Carmona¹⁷ remarks that most pre-modern Arabic book titles have a bipartite, generally rhyming structure, in which both parts have, also in general, a complete and independent significance¹⁸. Muḥammad Bāzī,¹⁹ in his abstract to his work, records that a book's title occupies an eminent position in Arab culture, as regards the subsequent production of the text and its interpretation. Its premises can be social, aesthetic, or educational. Along the lines of Genette's rhematic titles, Ḥasanīyya²⁰ comments that the Arabic term 'unwān embodies meanings of both marking and trace. It is a linguistic sign that fulfils various functions associated with the text and its producer. Titles can be viewed in two distinct ways: as self-containing constructions or in relation to the larger text.

Based on Genette's²¹ definition, this title is an example of a paratext wherein the first component is a subset of the second component. Finally, the metaphorical title with poetic features grants it a quasi-sacrosanct nature in terms of Lodge's²² understanding of such headlines.

2.2 Themes

The remainder of this text provides ample examples of a deeply spiritual epistolary discourse. It begins with the customary Islamic phrase invoking Allāh's name and attributes and concludes with a brief litany requesting Divine forgiveness for lapses. It is inundated with Qur'ānic verses – such as, “There is none like Him”²³ and Ḥadīth citations – such as, “I have been sent to perfect noble character traits”²⁴ - in support of the author's arguments. Shaykh Yūsuf also quotes spiritual apogees like Al-Ghazālī and Ibn 'Arabī. Its themes are categorised as follows:

1. Absolute importance about correct belief in Allāh.
2. Need for a pious and knowledgeable spiritual mentor.
3. Combination of the outer legal path (sharī'ah) with the inner spiritual path (ṭarīqah).
4. Importance of exemplary character.
5. Acceptance of Divine decree but rejection of people's evil actions.
6. Constant search for Divine forgiveness for one's transgressions without casting aspersions on other sinners.
7. Constant remembrance of Allāh.

8. Divine Reality and our relationship with it. Allāh manifests waḥda al-wujūd (unity of being) with His creation, meaning thereby an incomprehensible blend of transcendence and immanence. Consequently, the reality of this world (and all creation) is only virtual – like a shadow - and not real. His being is concealed in everything and with everything, firstly and lastly, without any interference or accompaniment. He encompasses everything both outwardly and inwardly, without being blended with it. He is at once both hidden and manifest to all. In this way, He combines contrary states within His being.

There are innumerable paths to access Him. Yet the most successful ones tread perfectly the exoteric and esoteric paths while observing immaculate character traits. Ultimately, they attain individual powerlessness (through relinquishing their personhood [fanā']) and Divine power (through enjoying permanence [baqā']).

This brief treatise covers the essentials of Islāmīc mysticism and ethics as outlined earlier. For this purpose, it contains about 56 Qur'ānic and 52 Ḥadīth quotations. The remainder of this section will discuss how some of these themes are exemplified in Al-Nafḥa.

2.3 Implicatures

As expounded by Grice (1913-1988) and delineated by Wayne Davis,²⁵ it occurs, for instance, when meaning or implying one thing by saying something else²⁶. The purpose for this exercise is to communicate effectively, maintain social relations, mislead without lying, and verbal efficiency. Simply stated, it accounts for how it is possible to mean more than what is said or literally expressed by an utterance. For Levinson,²⁷ principles that generate implicatures have strong power to provide explanations for many arrangements of unrelated facts including explanations for how metaphors work and many other phenomena.

There are three main varieties of implicature: speaker implicature, conversational, and conventional implicature, and sentence implicature. Only categories germane to our scrutiny will be proffered²⁸.

2.3.1 Speaker Implicature

Here, the speaker says things in a manner that is distinct from what he meant. In this way, he exhibits both effective communication and efficiency. Refer to the examples below:

Example 1: The following repartee transpires between Archangel Jibrīl and Prophet Ibrāhīm ﷺ when the former offers help to Prophet Ibrāhīm ﷺ (after he has been hurled in the fire by pagans):

Archangel Jibrīl: Do you need anything, Ibrāhīm?

Prophet Ibrāhīm: I do not need anything for myself.

Archangel Jibrīl: Ask your Lord for your needs.

Prophet Ibrāhīm: My supplication is covered by His knowledge about my condition.

The first reply does not suggest that Prophet Ibrāhīm ﷺ is totally self-reliant. Rather, as his second reply avers, knowledge about his condition already rests with Allāh who will grant his needs as He pleases; without Prophet Ibrāhīm's ﷺ request. This underscores Allāh's omniscience and omnipotence.

Example 2: When a person seeks the advice of the sage, Ibrāhīm Al-Adham, to help him overcome indulgence, Al-Adham employs logos and pathos to persuade the enquirer, thus: “If you want to disobey Allāh, don’t consume His sustenance ... If you want to disobey Allāh, don’t live on His earth ... (and) disobey Him where He doesn’t see you”. These responses, couched in an overly dramatic style, may also be regarded as satirical. For this purpose, the proposition to abide by a normative scale is inverted. Here, the addressee is challenged to live away from this earth or in a setting where Allāh’s authority is absent.

Example 3: The renowned Arabic poet, Abu l-‘Atāhiyya (d.828), is quoted to metaphorically contrast people’s inclinations to wash-off physical dirt from their garments while their faith remains polluted through disobedience to Divine decrees:

“What’s the matter! You pollute your faith,
While your garments are constantly washed to remove dirt”.

The poet then uses an extended metaphor to describe the consequences of following inappropriate strategies:

“You want safety without following its courses.
A ship does not sail on dry land!”

These couplets use irony to depict the absurdity of fallacious reasoning.

2.3.2 Conventional implicature

This can be inferred without relying on the context of the utterance or on the cooperative principle outlined by Grice (see iii below). In other words, the inferred meaning is part of the sentence and does not rely on any conversational context. I will not be expanding on this sub-category since it will simply confine appraisal to the literal text.

2.3.3 Conversational implicature

According to Grice,²⁹ these are a subclass of non-conventional implicatures. They are related to certain general features of discourse. Our conversations do not consist of a succession of disconnected remarks, but instead, our talk exchanges are characterized by cooperative efforts in which the recipient recognizes a common set of purposes or at least a mutually accepted direction.

Grice, then, introduces a general principle which participants of a conversation will be expected to observe, namely the conversational contribution such as is required, at the stage at which it occurs, by the accepted purpose or direction of the talk exchange in which one is engaged. This principle is called the ‘Cooperative Principle’.

The cooperative principle, as Grice formulates it, governs our conversations and it simply states that we should say things that are appropriate for the kind of conversation we are having. And to do so, one should follow four maxims or conversational maxims to have a quality conversation.

These maxims are introduced by Grice³⁰ as follows: the maxim of quality, quantity, manner, and relation. They are more like guidelines for an effective and efficient co-operative use of language. The conversational maxims are universal, and part of the human language and they are, therefore, what we should follow, and more importantly, what others assume we are doing. Their details are given now.

- The maxim of quality says that you should tell the truth and not say what you believe to be false. Also, to have evidence to back up your talk, in other words, to not say something when you lack adequate evidence.
- The maxim of quantity says that you must be as informative as is required, but no more so. You should get across the exact amount of information that you think is appropriate.
- The third maxim is not related to what is said, unlike the other three maxims, but rather to how what is said is to be said, and it is the maxim of manner. It means that you should talk in a way that is appropriate for the people that you are talking to. Under this category, Grice introduced other supermaxims which tell us to use words we think our listener will understand, to be brief, stay away from ambiguity, and be orderly.
- The fourth manner is the maxim of relation, and it emphasises relevance. The fourth maxim is important and necessary because it tells us that two things are, in fact, related when they do not seem to be so.

Finally, Levinson³¹ represents the four maxims as the important contributors for a maximally, efficient, and co-operative conversation. Moreover, Grice's point is not that we always adhere to these maxims on a superficial level, but rather that, whenever possible, people will interpret what we say as conforming to the maxims on at least some level.

Grice then explains irony and metaphor as being a result of maxim exploitation, more precisely when the first maxim of quality is flouted. Metaphorical expressions, thus, are the result of the contradiction or clash between what is expressed by an utterance and what is meant. This issue is now further expounded with reference to Al-Nafha.

As a prelude to our analysis, Lakoff and Johnson state in "Metaphors We Live by"³² that metaphor is not only a characteristic of language—namely words—but rather a matter of thought and actions. Metaphor, therefore, is prevalent in our everyday life and governs what we perceive, how we get around the world, and how we relate to other people around us.

Simile and metaphor will be assessed together since the former is a subset of the latter. The difference between them is explained as follows: the comparison in a simile is indirect while it is direct in a metaphor. Example 3 above depicts metaphor in relation to irony. Examples below will illustrate other functions of metaphor.

To stress the weight of absolute loyalty to one's spiritual guide, Shaykh Yūsuf uses the following similes:

Example 4: "In his presence, become bereft of exercising personal choice like a corpse before its washer who handles it as he pleases"³³.

Example 5: Spiritual guides are compared to prophets among the Israelites³⁴ (I shall return to this matter under "Metalinguistic implicature" below). This device is used to underline the superiority of people who remember Allāh over negligent ones hereunder.

Example 6: He who remembers Allāh amid negligent people is like a tree amidst ruin. By contrast with the radiant, luminous, and unified existence of the hereafter, this world is characterised by "veiled plurality and existential darkness". This metaphor evokes both intellectual and emotive responses from readers.

An ontological variety of conceptual metaphor is noticed in the following Prophetic commentary:

Example 7: Remembrance of Allāh is depicted in terms of grazing in the pastures of paradise.

Synecdoche is encountered in:

Example 8: Submitting the neck of submission to one's spiritual mentor. According to the lexicographer, Al-Zabīdī,³⁵ the neck is used for the whole person in these contexts to signify its vital importance and prestige in the human body.

Example 9: Personification foregrounds the testimony given by the ground on which a person prays. It weeps at the person's loss when he/she dies. This image represents a contrastive metaphor for sinners where, according to the Qur'ān,³⁶ the heavens and earth do not weep upon their death.

Example 10: Hyperbole sketches the importance of remembering Allāh intensely to the extent that the person is labelled insane.

After this study of tropes in which Grice's maxim of quality is flouted, we proceed to schemes in which sound sets forth the contextual meaning of specific segments.

Alliteration clarifies the outcome to emulating the path of the Holy Prophet ﷺ:

Example 11:

فصار بالاتباع للنبي ﷺ محبًا (و) محبوبًا فهذا هو عين السعادة

[Gloss: By emulating the Prophet, he becomes a lover {of Allāh} and His beloved. This is the essence of ultimate pleasure}. Here, both the active and passive forms of the noun are derived from the same root denoting love.

Assonance and consonance highlight the value of adopting virtuous character traits in which the two clauses are crafted in semantic parallelism (see directly below):

Example 12:

كن أشلا بشلا نشلا فشلا ولا تكن مهجعًا بهجعًا نهجعًا لهجعًا

[Gloss: Have good conduct, good actions, good speech, and good heart. And do not have bad conduct, foul conduct, foul speech, and bad heart.

2.3.4 Metalinguistic implicature

In this instance, the addressor implies that a particular phenomenon has a name by using that name to describe it. This feature is highly significant for our discussion because terms and concepts are sites of serious contestation among contenders. Adis Duderija explains:³⁷

"The Muslim intellectual tradition is full of instances of contestation over the meaning and implications of many of its major concepts ...

It is little wonder, then, that these and other major concepts in the Muslim intellectual tradition have been appropriated throughout Muslim history by various religious and/or political actors, with various degrees of success. Hence certain groups or actors were able to monopolise some of these concepts and came to be regarded — or, indeed, simply to regard themselves — as their most faithful, if not the only legitimate, interpreters”.

The following examples from Sunnī theology backed by spirituality will substantiate this view.

Example 13: Divine obedience to people is elucidated as follows: Allāh is quoted as saying: “I obey the one who obeys Me”. The immediate impression of this statement is that it is universally applicable to anyone who feels that his/her actions comply with Divine dictates. But Shaykh Yūsuf offers the following rejoinder: “In his devotion, the polytheist is neither obedient to nor does he serve Allāh”. Obedience to Allāh is conditional upon serving Him as He has ordained, otherwise it is nullified.³⁸

Example 14: hope versus delusion - A Ḥadīth states: “The wise person is one who takes a reckoning of him/herself and works for what follows death. The fool is one whose heart follows his/her passion and reposes hope in Allāh”. Shaykh Yūsuf comments that the fool is indiscreet since the devil has distorted this delusion by renaming it hope for him/her.

Example 15: definition of ‘ālim - Conventionally, such a person is a guardian, transmitter, and interpreter of religious knowledge in Islam. His/her ambit is mainly a literal interpretation and application of texts in daily life. To this dimension, Shaykh Yūsuf stresses the importance of the practical aspect when he says: “Religious savants are those learned in religion, teach it, guide people towards it and sincerely advise them to Allah’s worship”. Its subtext denotes that those who are devoid of practical conduct disqualify from being defined as religious authorities. Religious knowledge is bound to a calling rather than a profession.

Example 16: ontology of Divine love - By way of a prologue to this subject, the Qur’anic verse 24:52 declares that ultimate success depends upon constantly following Allāh and the Prophet ﷺ, as well as fearing Him and being conscious of Him. It also outlines this success by using the idiom of a trade transaction. In other words, a profitable transaction ensures for the person freedom from hellfire³⁹ or paradise.⁴⁰ Nevertheless, the greatest success is to win Divine pleasure.⁴¹

Prophetic assurances offered in this tract stipulate, inter alia, that the most successful person to ward off the punishment of hell and attain the most eminent abodes in paradise is one who frequently remembers Allāh. Shaykh Yūsuf states that people at lower levels of spiritual development concern themselves with either fear of averting Divine punishment or gaining His pleasure. In other words, their devotion serves extrinsic purposes. But the most elevated mystics have a perfect blend of these two aspirations ensconced in their hearts, thereby enabling them to pursue Divine pleasure for intrinsic reasons. A representative of this trend, Rābī’ a Al-‘Adawīyya (d. 801) boldly declared: “My Lord! I am not worshipping You out of fear of Your fire or out of desire for Your paradise. I am only worshipping You to comply with Your order and out of love for you”.

2.4 General communication strategies

At the outset, a broad sketch of ṣūfī thought as portrayed in their writings is given. According to Khafājī⁴², this genre reveals honest emotion, unflinching faith, profound experience, deep thoughts, self- introspection, an earnest imploring of Allāh and love for Him. It contains conversations that are especially relevant to psychology (like desire), ethics (like the basis of virtue and vice), and upbringing.

Metaphor and personification are vital instruments for conveying its findings. Its poetry is both surrealistic and romantic by breaking the shackles of conventional logic, foregrounding the subconscious mind, and prizing emotional ecstasy. Motifs like “traveller”, “adherent”, “love”, “self-annihilation” and “permanency in the Divine being” feature prominently.

Based on all the details given in this section, it is deduced that Al-Nafha is a mini-prototype of Sūfī discourse apropos its themes and implicatures. Some ingredients extraneous to sub-categories presented earlier will now be elucidated.

The spiritual nature of this discourse is evident from the circumstances surrounding its production; namely, that he was requested to pen this epistle in response to some friends’ request. But prior to acceding to the request, he sought Divine counsel through prayer which complies with Prophetic advice.⁴³ He also prays that Allāh grants the enquirer knowledge directly from Him together with its understanding.

Furthermore, the eight themes of his work are supported by several references from scripture and earlier savants, thereby affirming Al-Nafha’s status as both an intertext and paratext – in Genette’s parlance – of Islāmīc mysticism. His tone is both formal and warm; as found in his address about “Respected seeker treading to Allāh!” and “My brother in the comradeship of Allāh and fellow traveller to Allāh!”.

His role as guide is illustrated in his constant use of direct and indirect orders for which he employs the grammatical second-person imperative as well as the third person cohortative; as found in “Know!”, “Understand!”, “Reflect!”, “You must ...!”, “Let him seek ...!” At times there is repetition; as in “Beware! Then beware!” While repetition accentuates arguments it also validates the quasi-orality of this communication.

To stir the emotional and cognitive responses of his readers, Shaykh Yūsuf utilizes numerous tropes and schemes. Of particular interest is his use of metalinguistic implicature for challenging readers’ intellectual capacities. This exercise involves recontextualization (or, resemanticization) of earlier concepts.

The spiritual master’s power is immense, almost to the extent of sounding irrational. Followers are urged to refrain from harbouring any negative thoughts about him, even if he/she violates Islāmīc law. The rationale offered is that sinlessness is only a trait of prophets. This line of reasoning is strengthened by quoting the following emphatic exclusionary statement from Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ: “He who claims infallibility after me, does not belong to me”⁴⁴. All the mentor’s evils are superior to the virtues of his flock. To culminate this authoritarian streak, he warns that opposition to spiritual masters leads to a torrid death. We shall return to power issues shortly.

In concluding this sub-section, some general remarks about rhetoric are first given before clarifying its use in this text. Views about rhetoric explicated by classical Greek philosophers were freely available to Muslim thinkers a millennium ago⁴⁵. For instance, Aristotle (d. 322 B.C.) explained that rhetoric deals with the art of persuasion for which proofs are important. They focus either on the speaker or the speech itself. When the speech is delivered in a way that renders the speaker worthy of confidence, he/she wins the authority to speak which is called ethos. The speech persuades listeners either emotionally, which is called pathos, or by establishing the (apparently) truth through argumentation. In this latter case, the speaker employs logos (or logic).⁴⁶

The Egyptian authorities, Al-Jārim and Amīn,⁴⁷ define rhetoric thus: “Rendering meaning with clarity by using correct, eloquent diction which creates a captivating effect on the heart (or, mind). Every speech matches the situation in which it is uttered as well as the (status of) people addressed.”

When we appraise Al-Nafha in the light of these definitions, we note that it adheres to the norms of ṣūfī discourses; both at the level of themes and style, as set out in this entire section.

2.5 Power relations

As stated earlier, power in this text is better understood as influence. The difference between them is apparent; while power (the broader term) might entail the exercise of force for achieving objectives, influence (the narrower term) confines itself to the use of persuasion. These relations operate at the following levels: between teacher (here, Shaykh Yūsuf) and his disciples; between all devotees and Allāh; and between this group of adherents and outsiders.

The first one is the obvious relation. By virtue of his knowledge and conduct, Shaykh Yūsuf is the spiritual muse, as proven by his approval of a request from his friend about penning guidance for his followers. After obtaining Divine sanction for composing a response, he embarks upon his mission with tremendous gusto. He uses various persuasive strategies when issuing his commands (both direct and indirect) that appeal to the emotions and intellect of his recipients. In the process, he utilizes numerous tropes and schemes. The spiritual master’s power is immense, almost to the extent of sounding irrational. Shaykh Yūsuf’s personal power is enacted as an individual realization of group power, which in turn, is based on privileged access to socially valued resources like knowledge. The group power here relates to the authority enjoyed by spiritual masters over their followers.

The second power relation compares the incomparable knowledge and authority of Allāh to the limited capacities of all creation. Shaykh Yūsuf’s usage of personal power is in service of this level of power which realises that human domination must capitulate before Divine omnipotence. In ṣūfī terms, it has to perish (become fanā’). This attitude is exhibited by invocations at both ends of the text. At the beginning, Shaykh Yūsuf implores Divine guidance to him and like-minded people by employing the plural form. In the conclusion, he repeats Allāh’s role as guide and beseeches His forgiveness. To continue the ṣūfī metaphor cited earlier in this paragraph, this self-annihilation guarantees eternal existence in the Divine being (baqā’).

The third power relation implicitly contrasts the status of those who wield temporary worldly power and those who exercise (or will exercise) dominion in future. From this perspective, it is posited that this text strengthens the perspective of those who suffer from prejudice, discrimination, and marginalisation in this world. After these observations, we briefly focus on Shaykh Yūsuf’s influence.

3. Shaykh Yūsuf’s legacy

A direct descendant of Shaykh Yūsuf, Muzdalifah Sahib, records that this eminent leader had obtained permission in Syria from Abu l-Baraka Ayyūb al-Khalwaṭī al-Qurayshī (d. 1661), the imam of Masjid Al-Akhār of Mūhyi l-Dīn Ibn ‘Arabī, to propagate the Khalwaṭī order. It was further developed by Shaykh Yūsuf’s student, ‘Abd al-Baṣīr al-Ḍarīrī (d.1723).

Shaykh Yūsuf also taught another spiritual tradition (ṭarīqa) to one of his students, Abū Ḥamīd Karaeng Karunrung, which was later called the Yūsufiyya Ṭarīqa. It has an eclectic approach by combining all ṭarīqas that Shaykh Yūsuf had mastered; namely, the Naqshabandīyya, Qādirīyya, Shattariyya, ‘Alawīyya, and Khalwatīyya. There are obviously some technical differences between these two orders that do not deserve elaboration here. Teachings from these traditions are passed on from generation to generation.

Their primary teachings stress a balance between the worldly life and the hereafter. Moreover, there is a balance between yielding to earthly temptation and eradicating it. At the level of human conduct, there is prominence accorded to nurturing positive thoughts about others and dealing with them in dignified and refined fashion. The teachings relating to Allāh from the perspective of waḥda al-wujūd have already been clarified.

Lastly, they support an Islamic version of emanation which declares the following: Allāh created the First Principal which was the light of Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ that must, ontologically speaking, be distinguished from his physical persona. Everything in creation is a manifestation of this light and was most singularly embodied in all prophets and outstanding mystics. The Prophet ﷺ was thus the perfect human (al-insān al-kāmil). All other virtuous people attain this status to a level commensurate with their affinity to him.

There are a total of roughly 20,000 followers from various professions belonging to these orders. They are found in Indonesia, Malaysia, France, and South Africa. In the latter country, some modes of dhikr and other practices are believed to have been inspired by Shaykh Yūsuf.⁴⁸ Hendricks⁴⁹ judiciously concludes on Shaykh Yūsuf’s impact in South Africa thus: “The more accessible aspects and practices of Islām and taṣawwuf, such as certain litanies and invocations, were almost certainly taught to them⁵⁰ – evidence of which is liminally presented throughout the unfolding of Islām at the Cape”.

4. Conclusion

This chapter, located within the purview of Islamic ethics and spirituality, concentrated on the development of these fields at an individual and (to a lesser degree) collective levels. The views, gleaned from the writings of spiritual luminaries like Al-Jlānī, Al-Ghazālī and Shāh Wali Allāh, are then given; these are, in addition to the findings of the prose writer and polemicist, Al-Jāhīz, the philosophers Al-Fārābī and Al-Miskawayh, and the polymath Ibn Sīnā. Broadly speaking, the themes selected from their writings belong mainly to the mystical path (ṭarīqa) and, to a lesser degree, the venerated mystical reality (ḥaqīqa).

For identifying and scrutinising these concepts in his treatise, Al-Nafḥa Al-Ṣaylānīyyah, I have applied CDA. After having presented a résumé of this concept, I first outlined a list of themes covered in this manuscript. Thereafter, the discursive choice of certain linguistic devices, implicatures, and generic conventions were foregrounded which establish this text as a specimen of Sunni mystical-cum-ethical thought. It also reflected relations of (soft) power through influence exercised by the author on his readers.

For CDA, the views of Van Dijk in his Discourse and Society are particularly helpful. Significantly, while Shaykh Yūsuf emerges as a practitioner of power, he often reminded his readers that he was merely an intermediary for accessing Divine directives and power. Power relations are therefore multidimensional.

Finally, I devoted attention to his legacy as explained by Seraj Hendricks in his unpublished M A dissertation entitled Taṣawwuf (Sufism): Its Role and Impact on the Culture of the Cape, Muzdalifah Sahib in the doctoral thesis on her forefather under the heading Shaykh Yūsuf Al-Maqassari’s literary contribution with a special attention to his ‘Maṭālib Al-Sālikīn, and Muhaemin Latif in his article Exploring the Principal Teachings of Khalwatiah Syekh Yusuf Tariqah in South Sulawesi. To date, the Shaykh has a large following in the Indonesian Archipelago, in South Africa, and in Europe (such as France and the Netherlands).

5. Bibliography

- Al-Asadī, ‘Abd Allāh. 1999. Manārāt Al-Sā’irīn. Cairo: Al-Hai’a Al-Miṣrīyya Al-‘Āmma li l-Kitāb.
- Al-Bakrī, Muṣṭafā. 2019. Bulgha l-Murīd, (Commentary by Sulaimān Al-Juhainī Al-Khalwatī), 26 February. Online: noor-book.com/en/ebook ... بلغة المرید.pdf. [Accessed 5 March 2021].
- Al-Bukhārī, Muhammad bin Isma’il. 2002. Ṣaḥīḥ, Beirut and Damascus: Dār ibn Kathīr.
- Al-Dār Qutnī. 2001. Sunan (Ed. ‘Ādil Aḥmad ‘Abd Al-Mawjūd). Beirut: Dār Al-Ma’rif.
- Al-Fārābī, Abu l-Naṣr. 1925. Fuṣūl Muntaz’a. In Iḥṣā’ Al-‘Ulūm, ed. ‘U. M. Amīn. Cairo: Maṭba’a Al-Sa’āda.
- Al-Ghazālī, Abū Ḥāmid. 1957. Iḥyā’ ‘Ulūm Al-Dīn. Cairo: Dār Iḥyā’ Al-Kutub Al-‘Arabīyya.
- Al-Ghazālī, Abū Ḥāmid. n.d. Mizān Al-‘Amal. Jeddah: Dār Al-Minhāj.
- Al-Iṣfahānī, Rāghib. 1980. Al-Dharī’a ilā Makārim Al-Sharī’a. Beirut: s.n., 1980.
- Al-Jāhiz, Abū ‘Uthmān ‘Amr. 1989. Tahdhīb Al-Akhlāq (Ed. Ibrāhīm bin Muḥammad). Tanta: Dār Al-Ṣaḥāba li l-Turāth.
- Al-Jārim, ‘Alī, and Amīn, Muṣṭafā. 1969. Al-Balāgha Al-Wāḍiḥa. Cairo: Dār Al-Ma’ārif.
- Al-Jīlānī, ‘Abd Al-Qādir. 1997. Al-Ghunya li Ṭālibi l-Ḥaqq ‘Azz wa Jall (Ed. Ṣalāḥ bin Muḥammad). Beirut: Dār Al-Kutub Al-‘Ilmīyya, vol.2 pp.270-277.
- Al-Qur’ān Al-Karīm*. N.d. Cairo: Al-Maṭba’a Al-Amīrīyya.
- Al-Sha’rānī, ‘Abd Al-Wahhāb. 1988. Al-Anwār Al-Qudsīyya. Beirut: Maktaba Al-Ma’ārif.
- Al-Zabīdī, Muḥammad Al-Murtada. 2008. Tāj Al-‘Arūs min Jawāhir Al-Qāmūs. Kuwait: Matba’a Al-Kuwait. Online: waqfeya.net/book.php?bid=468 [Accessed 5 March 2021].
- Aristotle. 1926. Art of Rhetoric (trans. J. H. Freese) Cambridge and London. Harvard University Press. Volume XXII.
- Bāzī, M. 2017. Al-‘Unwān fi l-Thaqāfa l-‘Arabīyya: Al-Tashkīl wa Masālik Al-Ta’wīl. Algiers: Dār Al-‘Arabīyya.
- Carmona, A. 2000. The conventional structure of Arabic book titles. Al-Qantara. Online: https://www.researchgate.net/publication/298966076_The_conventional_structure_of_the_title_in_Arabic_books [Accessed 23 February 2021].
- Dadoo, Yousuf & Uwais Rafudeen (Eds.) 2019. Spiritual Path, Spiritual Reality: Selected Writings of Shaykh Yusuf of Macassar. Pretoria: Unisa Press, pp.171-181.
- Davis, Wayne. 2019. “Implicature”. In Standard Encyclopedia of Philosophy. Fall. Online: <https://plato.stanford.edu/entries/implicature> [Accessed 24 February 2021].
- Dirāz, Muhammad Abdullah. ‘A. 2017. Mukhtaṣar Dustūr Al-Akhlāq fi l-Qur’ān (Ed. M. Ḥilmī). Alexandria: Dār Al-Da’wah.
- Duderija, Adis. 2020. What it means to be a “progressive Islamist”. In ABC Religion & Ethics. Online: <https://www.abc.net.au/religion/what-is-means-to-be-a-progressive-islamist/12678154> [Accessed 7 March 2021].
- Fakhry, Majid. 2004. A History of Islamic Philosophy. Columbia University Press: New York. 3rd Ed.
- Genette, Gerard. 1997. Palimpsests (tr. C Newman and C Doubinsky). Lincoln & London: University of Nebraska Press.

- Grice, Herbert Paul. 1975. Logic and Conversation. In Speech Acts [Syntax and Semantics] (Eds. Peter Cole and Jerry Morgan). 3: 41-58. New York: Academic Press.
- Hasanīyya, Miskīn. 2014. Shi'rīyya Al-'Unwān fi l-Shi'r Al-Jazā'irī Al-Mu'āşir. PhD. University of Oran. Online: <https://theses.univ-oran1.dz/document/45201491t.pdf>. [Accessed 23 February 2021].
- Hendricks, Seraj. 2005. Taşawwuf (Sūfism): its role and impact on the culture of Cape Islām. Unpublished MA Thesis: Pretoria: University of South Africa.
- Ibn 'Arabī, Muḥyi l-Dīn. 2010. Tahdhīb Al-Akhlāq, (Ed. 'Abd Al-Rahmān Ḥasan Maḥmūd). Amman: Dār Al-Fikr.
- Ibn Ḥanbal, Ahmad. 1922. Musnad, ed. Shu'aib Al-Arnā'ut. Beirut: Mu'assasa Al-Risāla.
- Ibn Sinā. n.d. Al-Risāla Al-Thāmina. In Tis' Rasā'il fi l-Ḥikma wa l-Ṭabī'āt. Cairo: Dār Al-'Arab.
- Khafājī, Muḥammad 'Abd Al-Mun'im. 2016. Al-Adab fi l-Turāth Al-Şūfī. Cairo: Maktaba Gharīb.
- Lakoff, George & Mark Johnson. 2003. Metaphors we live by. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press.
- Latif, Muhaemin. 2020. Exploring the principal teachings of Khalwatiah Syekh Yusuf tariqah in South Sulawesi. In Journal of Islamic Civilization in Southeast Asia. 9(1):101-123, June.
- Levinson, Stephen C. 1983. Pragmatics. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Lodge, David. 2011. The Art of Fiction. London: Vintage.
- Mālik. 1971. Muwaṭṭa'. Beirut: Dār Al-Nafā'is.
- Miskawaih, Abū 'Alī Aḥmad. 2011. Tahdhīb Al-Akhlāq (Ed. 'Imād Al-Hilālī). Beirut: Manshūrāt Al-Jamal.
- Moosa, Ebrahim. 2005. Muslim Ethics? In: The Blackwell Companion to Religious Ethics. Malden, MA: Blackwell Publishing, Ch. 25 pp. 237-245.
- Nasr, Sayyid H. & Oliver Leaman (Eds.). 1996. History of Islamic Philosophy. Routledge: London and New York.
- Sahib, Muzdalifah. 2020. Shaykh Yūsuf Al-Maqassari's literary contribution with a special attention to his 'Maṭālib Al-Sālikīn. Ph. D. University of South Africa.
- Shāh Wali Allāh. 1936. Al-Taḥfīmāt Al-Ilāhīyya. Bijnore, India: Barqī Press. Vol. 1, pp. 86, 181, 261 and Vol. 2, p.36, p.54, and p.58.
- Shāh Wali Allāh. 2015. Hama'āt. In: Rasā'il-e-Imām Shāh Wali Allāh (Ed. 'Atā' Al-Rahmān Qāsimī and Translated from Persian into Urdu by Muḥammad Sarwar). New Delhi: Shāh Wali Allāh Academy, 2nd edition, Vol. 1, pp.33-65.
- Sharif, Mian Mohammad (Ed.). 1963. A History of Muslim Philosophy. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz. Online: <http://muslimphilosophy.com/hmp/index.html> [Accessed 8 March 2021].
- Van Dijk, Theun A. 1993. Principles of Critical Discourse Analysis. In Discourse and Society. 4(2): 249-283.

ENDNOTES

- ¹ Ebrahim Moosa, 2005.
- ² in certain situations – YD.
- ³ Miskawaih, 2011: 245.
- ⁴ Refer also to the remarks of Al-Ghazālī in his Ihyā' 'Ulūm Al-Dīn, vol. 3, p. 52. Due to space constraints, I avoid repeating opinions in the works of different scholars throughout this chapter. See Ibn 'Arabī, 2010: 12.
- ⁵ Al-Iṣṣfahānī, 1980: 50.
- ⁶ Al-Jāhīz, 1989: 16, 21.
- ⁷ Al-Fārābī, 1925: 20.
- ⁸ Al-Dharī'a ilā Makārim Al-Sharī'a, n.d.: 241.
- ⁹ Al-Ghazālī, Mīzān Al-'Amal, n.d.: 26.
- ¹⁰ Al-Fārābī, 1925: 34-35.
- ¹¹ Ibn Sīnā n.d.152.
- ¹² Miskawaih, 2011: 250-269.
- ¹³ Teun van Dijk, 1993.
- ¹⁴ Al-Nafha 2019.
- ¹⁵ Ibn Ḥanbal, vol. 4, section 287, report no. 18063.
- ¹⁶ Al-Dār Quṭnī, 2001, book 8, chapter 21, report no. 2030.
- ¹⁷ Carmona, 2000.
- ¹⁸ Other examples of rhythmic book titles include أسد الغابة في معرفة الصحابة and جامع البيان في تفسير القرآن, معارج القدس في مدارج معرفة النفس and معارج القدس في مدارج معرفة النفس.
- ¹⁹ Muḥammad Bāzī, 2017.
- ²⁰ Ḥasanīyya, 2014.
- ²¹ Genette, 1997.
- ²² Lodge, 2011.
- ²³ Qur'an 42:11.
- ²⁴ There are many Ḥadīth quotations whose authenticity has been disputed by authorities. However, for the purpose of this chapter, they are quoted. Some of them have become aphorisms. Ḥadīth sciences delve into the complexity of technically spurious reports by mentioning that their status may be redeemed if independent and more reliable reports from other chains of narration are available. This entire problem is discussed in the field titled أحكام الشواهد والتوابع. See Mālik, Muwaṭṭa', book 47, section 1, report no. 8.
- ²⁵ Grice, 1975; Wayne Davis, 2019.
- ²⁶ I have confined deliberation on and application of implicature to items raised in Shaykh Yūsuf's essay only.
- ²⁷ Levinson, 1983.
- ²⁸ Studies in implicature have been largely credited to the language philosopher, Paul Grice (1913-1988). They are constantly evolving and being modified. A lengthy review of this topic is inappropriate here. Categorisation of implicatures has been done in different ways. I have observed the procedure best suited to this chapter.
- ²⁹ Grice, 1975: 26.
- ³⁰ Grice, 1975: 26-27.
- ³¹ Levinson, 1983: 102.
- ³² Lakoff & Johnson, 2003: 4.
- ³³ This simile is found in many mystical tracts. For example, see, Ihyā' 'Ulūm Al-Dīn, vol. 4, p. 376; Al-Sha'rānī, vol. 1, p. 189; and Bulgha l-Murīd of Al-Bakrī, p. 51.
- ³⁴ This is a dubious Prophetic report.
- ³⁵ Al-Zabīdī, n.d.: vol. 2, p. 518.
- ³⁶ Qur'an 44:29.
- ³⁷ Adis Duderija, 21 September 2020.
- ³⁸ Qur'an 3:85.
- ³⁹ Qur'an 61:10-12.
- ⁴⁰ Qur'an 9:111.
- ⁴¹ Qur'an 5:119, 9:72.
- ⁴² Khafājī, 2016.
- ⁴³ Al-Bukhārī, book 80, chapter 48, report no. 6455.
- ⁴⁴ I was unable to trace this report to any credible source.
- ⁴⁵ For example, refer to Nasr & Leaman, 1996; M. M. Sharif 2002; and M. Fakhry 2004.

⁴⁶ See, Aristotle. 1926. Art of Rhetoric, Volume XXII (Loeb Classical Library No. 193), (trans. J. H. Freese) Cambridge and London. Harvard University Press. Online: <http://www.perseus.tufts.edu/hopper/text?doc=Perseus%3Atext%3A1999.01.0060%3Abook%3D1%3Achapter%3D2> [Accessed 4 March 2021]

⁴⁷ Al-Jārim & Amīn, 1969: 8.

⁴⁸ Sahib, 2019: 313-352; Latif, 2020: 101-123.

⁴⁹ Hendricks, 2005: 180.

⁵⁰ that is, his followers – Y.D.

CHAPTER SIX

Shaykh Yūsuf's Treatises: Themes in Select Sufi Texts

Suleman Essop Dangor

Abstract

Shaykh Yūsuf was an outstanding personality who is venerated in the Indonesian Archipelago as well as in South Africa - where he spent the last five years of his life - as a mujāhid and Sufi shaykh. He spent many years studying the Islamic sciences as well as taṣawwuf (mysticism) under reputable scholars in the Malay Archipelago, India, Yemen, Madinah and Damascus. In the course of his studies, he became a disciple of many orders including the Khalwatiyyah ṭarīqah. On his return to the Archipelago Shaykh Yūsuf as an ʿalim (scholar) and shaykh (spiritual guide) of the Khalwatiyyah ṭarīqah. he began to teach the Islamic sciences and initiate people into his ṭarīqah. He wrote several tracts on taṣawwuf (mysticism) through which his teachings spread beyond the borders of the Malay Archipelago, including South Africa. While some of his devoted disciples continued to adhere to the Khalwatiyyah ṭarīqah, a smaller group laid the foundations for the Khalwatiyyah Yūsufiyyah. This chapter confines itself to an analysis of Shaykh Yūsuf's Sufi texts on taṣawwuf and identifies their major themes which recur through the texts under study. It reflects the extent to which the Shaykh was influenced by many of the scholars cited in the texts, including Ibn ʿArabi. Finally, the chapter defines the stages which, according to Shaykh Yusuf, a disciple (murid) must pass through to attain gnosis (maʿrifah).

Keywords: Sufism, Khalwatiyyah, Sufi Shaykh, Sufi tracts

1. Introduction

On his return to the Malay Archipelago after his studies in the Malay Archipelago, India, Yemen, Madinah and Damascus, Shaykh Yūsuf proceeded to Bantam which had become the centre of Islamic learning and settled in the court of Sultan Ageng where he continued his teaching and joined the Sultan's Advisory Board. When the Dutch began to impose their dominance in the region, including Bantam, in the 17th Century, Shaykh Yūsuf joined the resistance and led a highly successful military campaign (jihād) against the Dutch.

Shaykh Yūsuf's lasting contribution is in the field of taṣawwuf. His lofty status can be gauged by the fact that his name has been mentioned in several writings that appear in Javanese and Malay sources. In the Maleische Handschriften (Malay Manuscripts) - No. 49 of the Collection in the library of the Batavian Society - a lengthy passage (pp.44-61) reveals that the collection of notes ascribed to Shaykh Yusuf focus on mysticism.

Shaykh Yūsuf's writings have been preserved both in public libraries and private collections. Fortunately, I was able to acquire several microfilms of his treatises on taṣawwuf from the University of Leiden Library. These treatises provide us with sound insights into the notions of Shaykh Yūsuf whose influence is not confined to the Indonesian Archipelago but spread beyond its borders, more specifically to South Africa where he spent the last five years of his life (1694-1699) and was buried at Faure in the Cape. The Cape Muslim community continues to revere him as a Sufi Shaykh of note.

The themes that have been identified and selected for analysis are those that appear in Shaykh Yūsuf's works that focus on taṣawwuf. As mentioned in the introduction, I have had access to many of these treatises. In my study, I was able to identify several of the Sūfi shuyūkh who had a great impact on his thinking as manifested in his writings. Shaykh Yūsuf cited Qur'ānic verses, aḥādīth, and ṣūfi sayings throughout the texts under consideration. These are detailed in the discussions that follow.

However, it should be noted what the texts often describe as “aḥādīth” are not to be found in the known Ḥadīth collections. They are, in fact, popular sayings attributed to prominent Ṣūfi masters; and they can be traced to their writings or cited by writers on taṣawwuf. I have, therefore, combined aḥādīth with ṣūfi sayings in this chapter.

2. Shuyūkh cited in the texts

Shaykh Yūsuf has either mentioned and/or cited over forty Sufi shuyūkh in his writings. Below are the names of those I identified in the various texts:

Muḥī al-Dīn al-'Arabī, 'Abd al-Qādir Jīlānī, Abū al-Qāsim Junayd al-Baghdādī, Bāyazīd al-Bustāmī, Muḥammad bin Faḍlallah al-Burhānpūrī, Ibrāhīm al-Adham, Ma'rūf al-Karkhī, Abū'l Atāhiya, Abū Sa'īd al-Ḥawwāz, Abū'l Qāsim al-Qushayrī, Nūr al-Dīn 'Abd al-Raḥmān Al-Jāmi', Shihāb al-Dīn Suhrawardī, Bahā al-Dīn Al-Naqshbandī, Muḥammad Bāqī Al-Naqshbandī, Abū al-Qāsim Junayd al-Baghdādī, Jalāl al-Dīn al-Suyūtī, 'Ārif al-Harwī, Sayyid Abū'l Ḥasan Al-Bakrī, Abū Muslim al-Khawlānī, Abū'l Māhasin Yūsuf al-Fāsī, Abū Ḥāmid Al-Ghazālī, Abū 'Abdullah al-Qurtubī, Aḥmad ibn 'Alī Al-Shinnāwī, Burhān al-Dīn Gharīb, Aḥmad bin Muḥammad al-Nashāshī, Muḥī al-Dīn al-Qashshāfī, Ibn Aṭā Allah Iskandarī, Abū Madyan al-Tilimsānī, Rab'ah al-Adawīyyah, 'Abd al-Wahhāb Sha'arānī, Abū Sa'īd al-Kharrāzī, 'Abd al-Karīm Al-Jilī, Sayyid Samhūdī, Mulla Ibrāhīm bin Ḥasan bin Shahābuddīn al-Kurdī al-Kurānī, Shaykh Tāj al-Dīn, Muḥammad bin Shaykh Faḍlallah, 'Abd al-Jalīl al-Mazbūr, Shaykh 'Abd al-Muḥyī, Abu Sa'id al-Kharrāzī, Shaykh 'Alī al-Muttaqī, Dhūn Nūn al-Miṣrī, Ibn Hafīfah Yaḥyā ibn Mu'adh al-Rāzī, Shaykh Karīm al-Raslānī, Abū Yaḥyā Zakariyya al-Anṣārī, Manṣūr al-Ḥallāj al-Baghdādī, Sayid Nasīm al-Ḥalabī, Abū Bakr al-Shiblī, Abū'l Muḡīth ibn Jamīl al-Yamānī.

Shaykh Yūsuf included many popular Sufis in his writings as is evident from the above. More than 15 Sufis were mentioned in one tract alone: Tanbīh al-Māshī. However, I will only cite the sayings of two prominent ones; they are Muḥī al-Dīn al-'Arabī¹ and Abū al-Qāsim Junayd al-Baghdādī.² The following statements attributed to them appear in the texts that have been inserted along each statement:

2.1 Muḥī al-Dīn ibn al-`Arabī

“I did not write all my books except as parables and at the same time, this is what I speak and that is what I teach”³

“All the noble verses revert back to the verse ‘There is nothing like unto Him’”.⁴

“Be careful in case any thought about opposing your shaykh occurs in your mind, even if you see him conducting himself contrary to the Sharī`ah...”⁵

“Those who attain the stage where Allah states ‘Verily My friends are under My tent’ and ‘Under My dome, none knows them other than Me’⁶ are called “Malāmiyyah” from among whom only the greatest awliyā` among the aqtāb [poles] emerge”⁷

“Only one possessing a soul is capable of being a praiser”.⁸

2.2 Abū al-Qāsim Junayd al-Baghdādī

“The essence of all their paths amounts to mysticism operated within the confines of the Qur’an and Sunnah”⁹

When he was asked “how have you arrived at this stage (qutaybah)” he replied “by placing this (while putting his hand on his cheek) “on the threshold of my shaykh’s door for forty years”.¹⁰

“This path of ours, that is path of taṣawwuf is bound by the Qur’an and Sunnah”.¹¹

“If a sincere believer devotes himself to Allah for a thousand years and turns away for just a moment then he has lost more than he has gained”¹²

3. Themes

In this section, I identify the central themes found in Shaykh Yūsuf’s writings and the first in this list is the definition of Sufism.

3.1 Sufism: Definition

Before cataloguing them, a variety of definitions of Sufism are to be found in the following texts of Shaykh Yusuf: Al-Fuṭūḥāt al-Ilāhiyyah, Tuḥfat al-Abrār li Ahl al-Asrār, Daḡ al-Balā`, Qurraṭ al-`Ayn, Al-Nafḥa al-Saylāniyyah fī l-Minḥat al-Raḥmāniyyah, Zubdat al-Asrar, and Daḡā`iq al-Asrār.

Sufism is defined in the following ways by Sufis themselves:

“The first step in Sufism is sincere devotion to Allah”.

“The path to taṣawwuf is bound by Qur’ān and Sunnah”.

“Taṣawwuf is good character”.

(Sufism is) “Cherishing good thoughts about people”.

“The essence of Sufism is to have good character (akhlāq)”.

“The beginning of Sufism is purifying your intention for Allah and the end of it is imbibing the character of Allah, Most High”.

“Taşawwuf is reformation of the heart”.

“The path is of three types: the first is having control over actions, the second is striving to beautify character and purifying the heart and the third is directing one’s attention to Allah and this is withdrawing from the people one loves and is based on subduing all desire”.

“Taşawwuf: the beginning is knowledge, the middle is action, and the end is endowment”.

“Taşawwuf is beautifying character, purification of the soul and purification of the heart”.

3.2 Bay`ah (Allegiance)

The obligation to follow a shaykh is outlined in the following texts: Al-Nafhat al-Saylāniyyah fī l-Minḥat al-Raḥmāniyyah, Qurrat al-`Ayn, Tuḥfat al-Abrār li Ahl al-Asrār, Al-Fuṭūḥāt al-Ilāhiyyah, Tuḥfat al-Mursala, Zubdat al-Asrār, Daqā`iq al-Asrār, Sirr al-Asrār, Tanbīh al-Māshī

Shaykh Yūsuf has cited numerous verses as well as aḥādith and ṣūfī sayings relating to bay`ah. These will be mentioned below.

a) Qur`ānic verses

Whoever obeys (pledges allegiance to) the Prophet obeys Allah.¹³

And those who violate their pledges with Allah...¹⁴

Among the believers are those who are true to the pledge they have made with Allah.¹⁵

The hand of Allah rests above their hands – bay ah.¹⁶

b) Ḥadīth & Ṣūfī sayings:

“If the murīd (disciple/seeker) is seeking the path to Truth, he must pledge allegiance (bay`ah) to a spiritual mentor (shaykh/murshid)”.

“One who does not have a spiritual mentor (shaykh) has the devil as his mentor”.

“If one dies and does not have a shaykh, (he/she) dies the death of an ignorant person”.¹⁷

“Man is found in the company of whom he loves.”¹⁸

3.3 Tawbah (Repentance)

Repentance and seeking forgiveness are discussed in the following texts: Tartīb al-Dhikr, Al-Nafha al-Saylāniyyah fī l-Minḥat al-Raḥmāniyyah, Daḥ al-Balā`, Qurrat al-`Ayn, Tuḥfat al-Abrār li Ahl al-Asrār, Taḥṣīl al-`Ināyah al-Tāmmah wa l-Hidāyah al-`Āmmah. Zubdat al-Asrar, Sirr al-Asrar.

Shaykh Yūsuf referred to numerous Qurʾanic verses as well as ahādīth and ṣūfī sayings emphasising the importance of repentance and seeking forgiveness.

a) Qurʾānic verses:

He accepts repentance from His servants.¹⁹

Surely Allah loves those who repent and those who purify themselves.²⁰

O believers, seek Allah’s forgiveness....²¹

“Oh my servants who have been excessive towards themselves do not despair of Allah’s Mercy”.²²

b) Ḥadīth and Ṣūfī sayings:

“I seek the forgiveness of Allah ...and I turn towards Him (in repentance)”.²³

“He who seeks forgiveness for his sins is like the one who has absolutely not sinned”.²⁴

“If you do not sin, He will bring forth a people who will sin. They will sin and seek His forgiveness. And He will forgive them”.²⁵

“I have prepared intercession on the Day of Resurrection for my community that has committed major sins”.²⁶

“I seek forgiveness seventy times daily”.²⁷

“I seek forgiveness a hundred times a day”.²⁸

“I have reserved my intercession for those with major sins”.²⁹

3.4 Dhikr (Remembrance of Allah)

Shaykh Yūsuf emphasised the importance of dhikr in most of his texts including Tuhfat al-Abrār li Ahl al-Asrār, Tartīb al-Dhikr, Al-Naḥḥat al-Saylāniyyah fī’l Minḥat al-Raḥmāniyyah, Qurrat al’Ayn, Daf’ al-Balā’, Taḥṣīl al-’Ināyah al-Tāmmah wa’l Hidāyah al-’Āmmah, Tuhfat al-Amr, Baḥr al-Lāhūt, Waṣiyyah Munjiyyah, Ikhtisās al-Dhikr, Bidāyat al-Mubtadī, Zubdat al-Asrar, Sirr al-Asrar, Tanbīh al-Māshī

These texts contain the following Qurʾanic verses and ahādīth and Ṣūfī sayings relating to dhikr:

a) Qurʾānic verses:

Remember Allah abundantly.³⁰

Remember Me and I will remember you³¹

Those who worship Allah standing....³²

I have created jinn and humans to worship me.³³

b) Ḥadīth and Ṣūfī sayings:

“Increase dhikr of Allah until they think you are insane”.

“Let your tongue be moist with the remembrance of Allah”.³⁴

“When Allah loves a servant, He inspires him with remembrance”.

“When Allah desires good for someone, He familiarises him with divine remembrance”.

“When Allah wants to make one of His servants a saint [walī] He causes him to increase His remembrance”.

“Dhikr for one hour is better than worship for a thousand years”.

“If Allah wishes good for His servant He mentions him abundantly”.

“I remain in the thoughts of My servant. I am with him so long as he remembers Me ...”³⁵

“The best dhikr is lā ilāha illallāh”.³⁶

“The best of what I and the prophets before me have uttered were the words lā ilāha illallāh”.³⁷

“There are 3 types of dhikr: lā ilāha illallāh, Allah Allah and Huwa Huwa [Hu Hu]. These represent the dhikr of tongue, inner heart, and innermost essence”.

3.5 Wujūd (Existence)

The existence and non-existence of the universe are discussed in many of Shaykh Yūsuf’s texts including the following: Al-Nafha al-Saylāniyyah fī l-Minḥat al-Raḥmāniyyah, Ma`na al-Wujūd, Maṭālib al-Sālikīn, Daf` al-Balā`, Ghāyat al-Iqtiṣād, Ishrīn Ṣifāh, Wajīb al-Wujūd, Ikhtisās al-Dhikr, Ma`na Qawl la Ilaha illallah, Bidāyat al-Mubtadī, Zubdat al-Asrar, Tanbīh al-Māshī.

Shaykh Yūsuf explained the concepts of existence and non-existence in the following Qur’anic verses and aḥadīth and ṣūfī sayings.

a) Qur’ānic verses:

Everything on it will perish except the Face of your Lord.³⁸

That which is with you will perish but that which is with Allah will remain.³⁹

b) Ḥadīth & Ṣūfī sayings

“The universe has no existence in reality”.

“Nothing exists besides Him”.

“Nothing exists in reality”.

“Allah exists in everything”.

“The best faith is knowing Allah is with you wherever you may be”.⁴⁰

“There is absolutely none who can benefit or can harm except Allah because profit and harm presuppose existence (wujūd)”.

“We have no existence (wujūd) but existence in reality belongs to Allah”.

“Between sheer existence and sheer non-existence there is a barrier (hijāb) that is named both possible non-existence (‘adam al-mumkin) and possible existence (mumkin) owing to the occurrence of both”.

“From pre-eternity to post-eternity sheer existence (wujūd ‘mahd) differs from sheer non-existence (wujūd ‘adam) to such an extent that their coming together can never be visualised neither intellectually nor in terms of legislation (shar‘) nor in terms of intuition (kashf)”.

“He is the Apparent within the essence of nothingness (‘adam) and He is Concealed within the essence of pre-eternity (qadm)”.

“The meaning of mujarrad is the type of remembrance that repudiates nothingness and asserts the being of Allah as the reality of existence”.

3.6 al-Ṣifāt al-Ilāhiyyah (Divine Attributes)

Shaykh Yūsuf included many Qur’anic verses and aḥādith and Ṣūfī sayings dealing with the Divine Attributes in virtually all his writings on taṣawwuf as can be established from the following texts: Al-Nafḥat al-Saylāniyyah fī’l Minḥat al-Raḥmāniyyah, Wājib al-Wujūd, Ishrīn Ṣifāh, Tuḥfat al-Abrār li Ahl al-Asrār, Kayfiyyat al-Dhikr, Tuḥfat al-Amr, Tāj al-Asrār fī Taḥqīq Mashārib al-‘Arifīn, Daḥ al-Balā’, Tuḥfat al-Mursala; Takhliṣ al-Ma‘ārif, Maṭālib al-Sālikīn, Qurraṭ al-‘Ayn, Waṣiyyah Munjiyyah, Ishrīn Ṣifāh, Taḥṣil ‘Ināyah, Ḥaqīqat al-Rūh, ‘Ayān al-Thābitah, Zubdat al-Asrār, Sirr al-Asrār, Baḥr al-Lāhūt, Tanbīh al-Māshī, Bidāyat al-Mubtadī, Al-Futūḥāt al-Ilāhiyyah.

The attributes, which appear in the texts, include the following:

a) Qur’ānic verses:

Allah speaks the truth Qur’an and guides towards the straight path.⁴¹

He is the First and the Last, the Manifest and the Concealed....⁴²

He is with you wherever you may be.⁴³

Allah knows each and everything.⁴⁴

He is the Knower of the Unseen.⁴⁵

He encompasses everything.⁴⁶

Nothing is comparable to Him.⁴⁷

He is Powerful over all things.⁴⁸

Indeed, Allah is All-Hearing and All-Seeing.⁴⁹

Wheresoever you turn there is the Presence of Allah.⁵⁰

Allah is the Light of the heavens and the earth.⁵¹

My Mercy extends over all things.⁵²

Do not despair of the Mercy of Allah.⁵³

Allah does what He intends.⁵⁴

Allah decrees what He wills.⁵⁵

Whenever We decree something then we just say to it `Be` and it is.⁵⁶

There is no god but Him the Living the Self-Subsisting.⁵⁷

Had there been deities beside Allah in the heavens and the earth they have been ruined.⁵⁸

To Him belongs the keys to the unseen world.⁵⁹

b) Aḥādīth & Ṣūfī sayings:

“What is intended by the word ‘arsh is the place where Allah the Exalted, the Supreme, the Most Perfect, the Most Complete manifests Himself, combining the divine manifestation of majesty and beauty”.

“Allah the Exalted when He manifests His unseen He-ness in accordance with His Will and governed by His divine names causes a copious emanation of His Existence upon entities”.

“He is the Essence (‘ayn) of everything”.

“In His Wisdom, He manifested knowledge about Himself via self-specification (ta`ayyun) in a form worthy of Him”.

“My Mercy precedes My Anger”.⁶⁰

“I am the way My servant thinks of Me, so let him have good thoughts about Me”.⁶¹

“Allah existed when nothing else besides Him existed”.

“The Lord remains the Lord even if He descended and the servant remains the servant even if he has ascended”.

“A disciple should know that Allah is described with all perfection of creation of everything which is under His control and Will (irādah)”.

3.7 The Prophet’s Status

The Prophet’s status is described in the following texts: Taḥṣīl al-‘Ināyah, Baḥr al-Lāhūt, Qurraṭ al-‘Ayn, Ḍaḡ al-Balā’ Sirr al-Asrār. The descriptions attributed to aḥādīth and Sufi sayings include the following:

“If you love Allah follow me”.⁶²

“I am from the Nūr of Allah”.

“The first thing to be created was the Nūr of Muhammad”.

“The first thing that was created was my soul I have created everything for your sake”.

“The first thing Allah created was My soul [rūh].”

“I was a prophet when Adam was between water and clay.”

“None of you believes until I am more beloved than yourselves and your wealth”.

“None of your faith will be complete until his desires comply with what I brought”.

“He must follow the Prophet in words and deeds openly and secretly”.

“The Prophet is the best of creation”.

3.8 Sharī`ah (Islamic Law) and Ḥaqīqah (Ultimate Truth)

The relationship between Sharī`ah and Ḥaqīqah is discussed in fair detail in the following texts: Tāj al-Asrār fī Tahqīq Mashārib al-`Ariḡmīn min Ahl al-Iṣṭibrār, Al-Naḡhat al-Saylāniyyah fī l-Minḡhat al-Raḡmāniyyah, Tuḡfat al-Abrār li Ahl al-Asrār, Waṣiyyah Munjiyyah, Qurraṡ al-`Ayn, Taḡṣīl al-`Ināyah al-Tāmmah wa`l Hidāyah al-`Ammah, Daḡf al-Balā`, Bidāyah al-Mubṡadī, Hāshiyyah fī Kitāb al-Anbā`, Zubṡat al-Asrar, Sirr al-Asrar. The following statements by ṣūfīs are scattered through Shaykh Yūsuf’s above-mentioned texts:

“The exoteric path, without Ḥaqīqah is futile and without Sharī`ah is useless”.

“I have been sent with the exoteric Sharī`ah and the esoteric Ḥaqīqah while all the other prophets have only been sent with the Sharī`ah”.

“Anyone who observes the Sharī`ah without the Ḥaqīqah transgresses”.

“Anyone who observes the Ḥaqīqah without the Sharī`ah commits apostasy”.

“Every Sharī`ah without Ḥaqīqah is false; and every Ḥaqīqah without Sharī`ah is futile”.
combine shari`ah with haqiqah

“The Sharī`ah is the outward form of the Ḥaqīqah while the Ḥaqīqah is the essence of the Sharī`ah”.

“The Sharī`ah is the attribute of Reality (Ḥaqīqah) just as the Reality signifies the Revealed Law (Sharī`ah)”.

“Zāhir without Bātin is like a body without a soul”.

3.9 Sharī`ah (Islamic Law) and Tarīqah (Mystical Path)

The relationship between Sharī`ah and Tarīqah appears in the following texts: Tāj al-Asrār fī Taḥqīq Mashārib al-`Arifīn, Qurrat al-`Ayn, Daf` al-Balā`, and Sirr al-Asrār.

“This is the way which is outwardly law (Sharī`ah) and inwardly the spiritual path (Tarīqah) and it is the way that Muḥammad and his heirs from among the prophets, saints and gnostics (arifīn)”.

“The greatest objective for this description is the merger of the manifest law (Sharī`ah) and the latent mysticism path (tariqah) and the concealment of the mystical path of the outward law”.

“I have been sent with the Sharī`ah and the Tarīqah while the prophets were only sent with the Sharī`ah”.

3.10 Perfecting Character (Akhlāq)

The following texts testify to the contention that perfecting one’s character is one of the main objectives of traversing the ṣūfī path: Tāj al-Asrār fī Taḥqīq Mashārib al-`Arifīn min Ahl al-İstibrār, Tuḥfat al-Abrār li Ahl al-Asrār, al-Naṣḥa al-Saylāniyyah fī l-Minḥat al-Raḥmāniyyah, Daf` al-Balā`, Zubdat al-Asrār, and Sirr al-Asrār. These texts include the following descriptions:

“I have been sent but to perfect good character (akhlāq)”.⁶³

“The prophet stated: ‘The one with best character will be closest to him on the day of judgement’”.

“Allah has many good attributes whoever imbibes one of them will enter Paradise”.⁶⁴

“The best person is the one with the best character”.⁶⁵

“The best in Creation is the one who is best in conduct”.⁶⁶

“Imbue yourselves with the attributes (Ṣifāt) of Allah”.⁶⁷

“The Ṣūfī is imbued with the divine attributes and is His vicegerent”.

“A believer is the mirror of another believer”.⁶⁸

3.11 How Allah draws the servant close to Him

Shaykh Yūsuf discussed how Allah draws a seeker (sālik) to Him in the following texts: Tuḥfat al-Abrār li Ahl al-Asrār, Ma`na al-Wujūd, Taḥṣīl al-`Ināyah al-Tāmmah wa`l Hidāyah al-`Āmmah, Maṭālib al-Sālikīn, Ḥaqīqat al-Rūḥ, Shurūṭ al-`Arif al-Muḥaqqiq, Qurrat al-`Ayn, Tāj al-Asrār fī Taḥqīq Mashārib al-`Arifīn min Ahl al-İstibrār, Wājib al-Wujūd, Waṣiyyah Munjiyyah, Takhlīṣ al-Ma`ārif, and Kayfiyyat al-Nafi. The following sayings appear in these texts:

“I did not see anything except I saw Allah”.

“The Ṣūfīs have said that the rūḥ al-`azam (the greatest rūḥ) is the avenue for the manifestation of the divine essence [dhāt] which never has any kind of restriction in terms of the divinity (rubūbiyyah) that Allah chooses through His divine light for every one who seeks Him who has been veiled in best known to Allah.

“If Allah wishes good for His servant He mentions him abundantly”.

“If Allah wishes to make His servant a friend (walī), he makes him remember Him”.

“The gnostic (`ārif) is entrusted with eminent sainthood (wilāyah)”.

“My servant continues coming closer to Me with voluntary actions until I love him, and I become his ear with which he hears, his eye with which he sees, his hands with which he strikes, and his foot with which he walks”.⁶⁹

“Neither My earth nor My heavens can contain Me but the heart of My God-fearing, pure servant can contain Me”.

“Whoever seeks Me will find Me”.⁷⁰

“Who knows Me will seek Me and who seeks Me will find Me and who finds Me will love Me and who loves Me I will kill”.

“The human is My innermost spirit/secret (sirr) and I am his innermost spirit/secret (sirr)”.

“My intimate friends (awliyyah) are under my supervision, no one knows them except Me”.

“The heart of the believer is the throne (`arsh) of Allah”.

“You did not throw when you threw”.⁷¹

“If Allah loves a servant no sin harms him”.

“The `ārif must know that Allah is with him wherever he is”.

3.12 How a servant attains closeness to Allah

Shaykh Yūsuf discussed how a sālik can attain closeness to Allah in the following texts: Tuḥfat al-Abrār li Ahl al-Asrār, Maṭālib al-Sālikīn, Taḥṣīl al-Ināyah al-Tāmmah wa' l-Hidāyah al-`Āmmah, Ḥaḳīqat al-Rūḥ, Shurūṭ al-`Ārif al-Muḥaqqiq, Qurrat al-`Ayn, Masharib al-`Arifīn, Tāj al-Asrār fī Taḥqīq Mashārib al-`Arifīn min Ahl al-Iṣṭibrār, Wājib al-Wujūd, Waṣiyyah Munjiyyah, Takhlīṣ al-Ma`ārif, and al-Nur al-Hadi. In order to attain nearness to Allah, a murīd has to pass through a number of maqāmāt (spiritual stations) or aḥwāl (spiritual states). These differ from ṭarīqah to ṭarīqah. Below I will list the stations the murīd has to pass through and principles he has to adhere to for his spiritual ascension (mi`rāj) which are mentioned in the diverse texts under discussion:

- affirming true belief in Divine Oneness [waḥdāniyyah].

- indulging in abundant dhikr [remembrance of Allah].
- seeking forgiveness through repentance [tawbah].
- knowing oneself (“He who knows himself (nafs) knows his Lord”). This saying is found in almost of the texts under discussion.
- exerting great rigour and endeavour [mujāhadah] against the passions and tendencies of the lower self.
- constantly self-examining one’s actions [muḥāsabah].
- observing and contemplating Allah within the heart [murāqabah].
- turning attention towards Allah (tawajjuh) with all one’s heart in all conditions, and at all times and not thinking of anything except Him.
- being pleased (raḍā’) with Divine Decree (qadr).
- expressing shukr (gratitude) to Allah.
- having complete trust in Allah and surrendering to His Will (tawakkul).
- being content with zuhd (renunciation of desire toward the world).
- pondering (tafakkur) over Allah’s favours.
- worshipping Allah until you attain certainty (yaqīn).
- seeking the means to Allah (wasīlah).
- acting in accordance with the Divine Will (irādah).
- performing nawāfil (supererogatory acts).
- purifying intention (ikhlās) for Allah.
- cherishing good thoughts about people (ḥusn al-khalq)
- getting along well with other creation.
- cultivating good character (akhlāq).
- imbibing Divine Attributes (ṣifāt).
- purifying the heart (tazkiyyat al-nafs).
- serving others (khidmah).
- giving preference to the well-being of others (ithār).
- manifesting love (maḥabbah) for Allah.
- being free from all kinds of attachment toward worldly things (faqr).
- harbouring fear (khawf) of displeasing Allah.
- exercising patience (ṣabr) in surrendering unconditionally to the Will of Allah.
- abstaining from what is unbecoming and unnecessary (warā’).

4. Discussion

Shaykh Yūsuf’s writings are very much mainstream. The contents are what one would typically find in standard Sufī texts. Most of the shuyūkh he cited in his writings are renowned in the field of taṣawwuf. The concepts that permeate his writings are well-established. There is only one text where he mentioned the Shi‘ah and the role of the Sulṭān: Qurrat al-‘Ayn. This is rather peculiar. However, this is beyond the scope of this discussion.

The main objective of the murīd [disciple] or sālik [seeker] is to attain nearness to Allah [qurbah]. He has to gain control over the nafs (animal self) and purify the heart (qalb) which is “the throne of Allah”. Sufi shuyūkh have debated the nature of proximity to God, its degrees, and the means for attaining it. A detailed discussion of this topic is to be found in Ibn al-‘Arabī’s al-Futūḥāt al-Makkīyah [The Meccan Revelations] and Jāmī’s Naqd al-Nuṣūṣ fī Sharḥ Naqsh al-Fuṣūṣ. Shaykh Yusuf cited both Ibn al-‘Arabī and Jāmī in his writings.

Shaykh Yūsuf cited Abū Ḥamid Ghazzālī’s definition of Sufism which affirms the goal of achieving nearness: “And by Sufism (taṣawwuf), I mean that for which the human being (al-insān) was created: wayfaring (sulūk) the path of nearness (qurb) to Allah, the exalted”. The shawq [intense spiritual yearning and longing for the Beloved] can only be satisfied through absolute obedience to a murshid [spiritual guide]. The bay‘ah to a shaykh is considered a pledge to the Prophet ﷺ which in turn amounts to a pledge to Allah. This bay‘ah is not simply a recommendation, but is obligatory. The ṭarīqah [mystical spiritual path] which the murīd embarks on must be combined with the sharī‘ah [the manifest law]. This is substantiated by the following saying attributed to the Prophet ﷺ: “I have been sent with the sharī‘ah and the ḥaqīqah while the prophets were only sent with the ṣharī‘ah”.

The sharī‘ah represents the zāhir [exoteric/outer] dimension of Islam and the ḥaqīqah represents the bāṭin [esoteric/inner spiritual] dimension of Islam. The sharī‘ah can be likened to the human body and the ḥaqīqah to the soul. Shaykh Yūsuf cited Bāyazid al-Bustāmī’ who said that “Every act of sharī‘ah without ḥaqīqah is false and every ḥaqīqah without sharī‘ah is futile”. The following words are also attributed to the Prophet ﷺ, “I have been sent with the sharī‘ah and the ṭarīqah while all other prophets were sent only with the sharī‘ah”. This appears to be a sūfi saying and not a ḥadīth; and it is clearly intended to promote the ṭarīqah. The exterior of the nafs is sharī‘ah and its interior is ṭarīqah.

When murīds set out on their journey, they are at the stage of ‘awāmm [initiates, lit. common folk], later they reach the stage of khawāṣṣ [elite] and finally the stage of akḥaṣṣ al-khawāṣṣ [super elect]. As they travel along the path, they must overcome the hijab [Divine Veil] which hides Allah’s Manifestation [tajalli] from them. The murīd seeks Allah alone to the exclusion of all else. Shaykh Yūsuf cited the following from Junayd al-Baghdādī: “Nothing is desired except as a means to approach God. If a servant approached Allah for a million years but turned away from Him for even one second, then that which he lost is greater than what he had earlier attained”.

Since Allah’s existence is Absolute – He is Existent with no form or limitation or restriction - while all other existences are non-existent (‘adam) in reality - though they appear to exist in reality due to their outward manifestation - the disciple’s focus should only be on the Essential Reality [al-Ḥaqīqah]. When Allah loves His ‘abd [servant] He draws him closer to Him through inspiring him to make constant dhikr and entrusting him with sainthood. According to shaykh Yūsuf, “the gnostic (‘arif) is entrusted with eminent sainthood (wilāyah)”. The walī stands in God’s Unicity or Absolute Oneness (waḥdāniyyah).

As for dhikr, there are three types: lā ilāha illallāh, Allah Allah and Huwa Huwa [Hu Hu]. These represent the dhikr of the tongue, the inner heart, and the innermost essence respectively. The first is described as the best form of dhikr. The murīd's goal is not achieved through fulfilment of the obligatory acts alone. Shaykh Yūsuf cited the following ḥadīth qudsī: “My servant continues coming closer to Me with voluntary actions until I love him, and I become his ear with which he hears, his eye with which he sees, his hands with which he strikes, and his foot with which he walks”.

He also referred to Ibn al-`Arabī's advice: “it is by the supererogatory works that God becomes the servants hearing and seeing”⁷² and Abd al-Qādir Jīlānī's response when he was asked “how have you reached Allah, the Exalted?”. He replied, “I did not reach Allah, through abundance of prayer and fasting but through humility and generosity of spirit and soundness of heart and fulfilment of promises”. In this connection, Shaykh Yūsuf stated that there are three types of qiblah:

- a. qiblat al-`amal [action] refers to turning to the haram in prayer. This is the qiblah of the general population.
- b. qiblat al-`ilm [knowledge] refers to a stage where no matter in which direction you face you will find the countenance of Allah. This is the qiblah of the elite.
- c. qiblat al-sirr [secret] refers to following the Prophet outwardly and inwardly. This is only known by people who devote their full attention.

This means that even the performance of the obligatory prayers has to move from mere adherence to the rules to turning one's full attention towards Allah under all circumstances. As Shaykh Yūsuf declared, “The truly living person among the servants is one whose secret (sirr) is living by the Light of Allah, whose heart is living by the dhikr of Allah and his limbs are living by the obedience to Allah”.

The path culminates in ma`rifah (gnosis) or maḥabbah (love). When the ārif has imbued himself with Divine Attributes he is known as al-insān al-kāmil (the perfect believer). He is also known as the qutb (lit. pole or axis) who is considered the human representation of the divine consciousness. He becomes the secret (sirr) of the Exalted in creation just as his Lord is also the secret of this servant that is imbued with the Divine Attributes. He is also known as the khalīfah (lit. successor) since he models his actions on the Divine Commands.

The final stage of the journey or path leads to “total annihilation (fanā`) in the divine attributes” and “subsistence (baqā`) with Him”. At this stage, the ārif will have direct personal experience of Allah (dhawq). This stage is referred to as waḥdat al-wujūd (Unity of Being) when knowledge of the unseen Reality is unveiled (kashf) to him; and he witnesses Allah's sovereignty or lordship (rubūbiyyah). He becomes absorbed in the Divine Illumination (tajallī) at the moment of Self-Manifestation of the Ultimate Reality (al-Haqq). However, he retains his human nature and remains an abd (servant) of the Exalted.

In sum, Shaykh Yūsuf's central focus is on the renunciation of worldly things (faqr), abstinence from what is unnecessary (warā'), purification of the rūḥ (tazkiyyat al-nafs) through constant dhikr, reformation of character (ahklāq) and mystical contemplation (murāqabah) of the Divine Essence.

5. Conclusion

Shaykh Yūsuf's familiarity with Sufis and knowledge of Sufism is phenomenal. This is manifested through his identification of over forty Sufis, and references to their works and citations of their words and statements in his writings. He can be classified as "orthodox" in his approach because he did not advocate departure from the sharī'ah as do some other Sufis. In addition, he emphasized adherence to not the Qur'ān only but also to the Sunnah which effectively rules out many of the peculiar practices associated with some Sufi orders.

There is no evidence that Shaykh Yūsuf produced any texts during his exile at the Cape. It can be safely assumed that he continued with practices associated with the Khalwatiyyah ṭarīqah, including the initiation of members. Some scholars argued that the ṭarīqah influenced several rituals such as burials at the Cape. It is reported that he used to visit the slave lodge secretly at night. As a Sufi shaykh, he must have engaged in dhikr sessions with those who gathered around him; and this practice must have continued after his demise.

Furthermore, Shaykh Yūsuf is known to have been accompanied by eleven of his disciples who arrived with him from Ceylon. Though the Dutch colonialists prohibited the public expression of Islam and the first masjid was established only in 1794 by Tuan Guru, Islam survived during this period. This must be attributed to a large extent to the propagation of the Khalwatiyyah ṭarīqah by Shaykh Yūsuf's disciples.

6. Bibliography

- Al-Bukhārī, Abū `Abdallāh Muḥammad ibn Ismā`īl. 1862. al-Jāmi` al-Ṣaḥīḥ (Ed. Ludolf Krell). Leiden: Brill. 4 vols.
- Al-Hujwārī, `Alī ibn `Uthmān. 1970. Kashf al-Mahjūb (Tr. R.A. Nicholson). London: Luzac & Co. E.J.W. Gibb Memorial Series. Vol. XVII.
- Al-Nasā`ī, Abū `Abd al-Raḥmān Aḥmad. 2001. Sunan. Beirut: Mu`assasat al-Risālah. 12 vols.
- Al-Tirmidhī, Abū `Īsā Muḥammad. 1974. al-Jāmi` al-Ṣaḥīḥ. (Ed. `Abd al-Wahhāb `Abd al-Laṭīf). Madīnah: al-Maktabah al-Salafīyyah. 4 vols.
- Al-Ṭabarānī, Sulaymān ibn Aḥmad. 2008. Mu`jam al-Kabīr. Cairo: Maktabat ibn Taymiyyah. 25 vols.

Abu Dawud, Sulayman ibn al-Ash'ath as-Sijistani. 2010. Sunan. Beirut: al- Maktabat al-Asriyyah. 4 vols.

Arberry, Arthur, J. 1966. Muslim Saints and Mystics (A translation of episodes from the Tadhkirat al-Auliya' by Farid al-Din Attar). London: Routledge & Kegan Paul.

Ibn Hanbal, Ahmad. 2009. Musnad. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risālah. 5 vols.

Ibn Mājah, Abū `Abdallah Muḥammad ibn Yazīd al-Qazwīnī. 1952. Sunan. (Ed. Muḥammad Fu`ād `Abd al-Bāqī). Beirut: `Isā al-Bābī al-Ḥalabī. 2 vols.

Lane, Edward William. 1863-1893. Arabic-English Lexicon (Ed. Stanley Lane Poole). London: Williams & Norgate. 8 vols.

Mālik ibn Anas, Abū `Abdallah. 1971. Muwatta' Imām Mālik (Ed. Aḥmad Rātīb `Armūsh). Beirut: Dār al-Nafā'is.

Schimmel, Annemarie. 1975. Mystical Dimensions of Islam. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press.

Wensinck, Arent Jan. 1971. A Handbook of Early Muhammadan Tradition. Leiden: E. J. Brill.

Endnotes

¹ Ibn al-'Arabī, in full Muḥyī al-Dīn Abū `Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn `Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn al-'Arabī al-Ḥātīmī al-Ṭā'ī Ibn al-'Arabī, also called Al-Sheikh al-Akbar, (born July 28, 1165, Murcia, Valencia—died November 16, 1240, Damascus), celebrated Muslim mystic-philosopher who gave the esoteric, mystical dimension of Islamic thought its first full-fledged philosophic expression. His major works are the Al-Futūḥāt al-Makkiyyah ("The Meccan Revelations") and Fuṣūṣ al-ḥikam (1229; "The Bezels of Wisdom").

² Junayd of Baghdad (835–910) was a Persian mystic and one of the most famous of the early Saints of Islam. He is a central figure in the spiritual lineage of many Sufi orders. Junayd taught in Baghdad throughout his lifetime and was an important figure in the development of Sufi doctrine. Junayd, like Hasan of Basra before him, was widely revered by his students and disciples as well as quoted by other mystics. Because of his importance in Sufi theology, Junayd was often referred to as the "Sultan".

³ Shurūṭ al-'Arīf al-Muḥaqqiq.

⁴ This is repeated in most of his writings including Tāj al-Asrār fī Taḥqīq Mashārib al-'Arīfīn min Ahl al-Iṣṭibrār, Tuḥfat al-Amr fī Faḍīlat al-Dhikr.

⁵ Al-Nafhat al-Saylāniyyah fī'l Minḥat al-Raḥmāniyyah.

⁶ Kash al-Mahjūb,

⁷ Zubdat al-Asrār.

⁸ Sirr al-Asrār

⁹ Qurrat al-'Ayn.

¹⁰ Shurūṭ al-'Arīf al-Muḥaqqiq, Zubdat al-Asrār, and Daqā'iq al-Asrār.

¹¹ Tāj al-Asrār fī Taḥqīq Mashārib al-'Arīfīn.

¹² Al-Futūḥāt al-Ilāhiyyah, Daqā'iq al-Asrār, Kayfiyyat al-Nafī.

¹³ Qur'ān 4: 80.

¹⁴ Qur'ān 13: 25.

¹⁵ Qur'ān 33: 23.

¹⁶ Qur'ān 48: 10.

¹⁷ Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim.

- ¹⁸ Ṣahih al-Bukhārī.
- ¹⁹ Qur'ān 42: 25.
- ²⁰ Qur'ān 2: 222.
- ²¹ Qur'ān 24: 31.
- ²² Qur'ān 39:53.
- ²³ Ṣahih al-Bukhārī..
- ²⁴ Sunan Ibn Mājah.
- ²⁵ Ṣahīḥ Muslim
- ²⁶ Musnad Ibn Hanbal, Sunan Abu Dāwūd.
- ²⁷ Ṣahih al-Bukhari
- ²⁸ Sunan Ibn Mājah
- ²⁹ Ibid.
- ³⁰ Qur'ān 33:42.
- ³¹ Qur'an 2: 152.
- ³² Qur'ān 4- 103.
- ³³ Qur'ān 51:56.
- ³⁴ Sunan Ibn Mājah
- ³⁵ Ṣahīḥ Muslim
- ³⁶ Sunan Ibn Mājah.
- ³⁷ Al-Muwatta' Imam Mālik.
- ³⁸ Qur'ān 55: 27.
- ³⁹ Qur'ān 16: 96.
- ⁴⁰ Al-Ṭabarānī, Mu'jam al-Kabīr.
- ⁴¹ Qur'ān 33: 4.
- ⁴² Qur'ān 57: 3.
- ⁴³ Qur'ān 57: 4.
- ⁴⁴ Qur'ān 33: 40.
- ⁴⁵ Qur'ān 5: 109.
- ⁴⁶ Qur'ān 41: 54, 4: 126, 65: 12.
- ⁴⁷ Qur'ān, 42: 11.
- ⁴⁸ Qur'ān 5: 120.
- ⁴⁹ Qur'ān, 58: 1.
- ⁵⁰ Qur'ān 2: 114.
- ⁵¹ Qur'ān 24: 35.
- ⁵² Qur'ān 7: 156.
- ⁵³ Qur'ān 37:53.
- ⁵⁴ Qur'ān 22:14.
- ⁵⁵ Qur'ān 5:1.
- ⁵⁶ Qur'ān 16:40.
- ⁵⁷ Qur'ān 2:255.
- ⁵⁸ Qur'ān 21:22.
- ⁵⁹ Qur'ān 6:59.
- ⁶⁰ Sunan Ibn Mājah, Ṣahīḥ al-Bukhārī.
- ⁶¹ Ṣahih al-Bukhārī.
- ⁶² Qur'an, 3:31.
- ⁶³ This ḥadīth, with slight variation in wording appears in al-Muwatta' Imam Malik.
- ⁶⁴ Al-Ṭabarānī [Hadees-e-Qudsi, p. 20].
- ⁶⁵ Sunan al-Tirmidhī.
- ⁶⁶ Ibid.
- ⁶⁷ Though described as a ḥadīth, I was unable to trace it in the Hadith collections.
- ⁶⁸ Sunan Abu Dāwūd; see vol. 4, p 280.
- ⁶⁹ Ṣahih al-Bukhārī.
- ⁷⁰ Hadīth Qudsi. Source unknown.
- ⁷¹ Qur'ān 8:17.
- ⁷² Ṣahih al-Bukhārī.

Shaykh Yusuf Through Pictures

(II)

Honouring Shaykh Yusuf (I) : The Statues

Location : Losari Beach, Makassar, South Sulawesi, Indonesia
(Source : www.butonmagz.id)

Nelson Mandela (far left); Shaykh Yusuf (centre); Mahatma Gandhi (right)
Location : Losari Beach, Makassar, South Sulawesi, Indonesia
(Source : <https://www.kompasiana.com/>)

Honouring Shaykh Yusuf (II) : The Stamps (2011)

(Source : <http://www.thegowacenter.blogspot.com>)

(Source : <https://sulsel.idntimes.com>)

Honouring Shaykh Yusuf (III) : The Plaques

Location : Shaykh Yusuf's Maqam in Cape Town, Western Cape, South Africa
(Source : <https://www.flickr.com/photos/61506334@N04/24887292765>)

Location : Shyakh Yusuf's Maqam in Gowa, South Sulawesi, Indonesia
(Source : <https://www.jejakmihrabmimbar.wordpress.com/>)

Part 2

Imam ‘Abdullah ibn Qadi’ Abdus-Salam

IMMORTAL SOUL – A TRIBUTE

Luqman bin Nurel-Erefan Rakiep

I

The Order...

Warmth, love, tranquillity and God-inspired Peace permeate the air.
Into nothingness the glare of the tropical sun is diminished by the all-illuminating Light; Allah Allahu nur assamawati wal ard...
 Allahu, Allaahu... Allaaa h intricately, linking the hearts of but a selected few.

In the circle, a refrain from the depth of the heart doth sound:

 “O! Searchers of the Truth. Invoke...
 Invoke and praise the name of thine Lord,
 Who hath createth man from a congealed clot and provideth his sustenance to evolve – to Perfection.
 Yes his vicegerent on earth man above creation reigns supreme. So in Allah’s greatness and essence, let thee submerge and annihilate thineself in sure knowledge that ultimately, nothing, Nothing will remain save His Face.
 Thus, a slave to none but Him thine be for the essence of thine Lord is – Free.

Harkening to the call, in the light of Marifat-Allah a son of the Malayan Archipelago was born –
Self-denying, Al-Fakir, Al-Hakir Abdullah bin Qadi Abdus-Salam.
Destined to serve the purpose of his Lord, the blood through his veins roared:

Allahu, Allaahu... Allaaa h

II

The Colonial Powers...

Conflict, war and exploitation of labour and natural resource wreak havoc and grieve on foreign land and sea.

Greed – the motive force behind this atrocious act, made them the Hereafter reject.

Like the darkness of the night, the heart of the perpetrator Dutch, Portuguese, Spaniard and British alike, blinded by soul-destroying craving for earthly wealth and might,
had forsaken the Light.

The blackened heart submerged in self-interest
the body thereupon fed:

I want, I want!... I want!!!

defiling the hands, red with innocent blood.

Like the sun in the twilight of sunset glow, the blood, the blood of the slain children of the Archipelago had flown.
The sound of their dripping blood a death-defying battlecry:

No, No!... No!!!

to the darkness of the night.

Yes! Resist they did, with limb and stick.

And among the warriors arose a guiding star

Al-Fakir, Al-Hakir Abdullah bin Qadi Abdus-Salam.

Ferocious in adversity he had fought with all his might and proved to be in the darkness a piercing Light, as with vitality the blood through his veins roared:

Allahu, Allaahu... Allaaa h.

Destiny...

Grieve, bereavement and loss for the Archipelago for the exile of a mighty son had disturbed the Order.
Unjustly banished to the Cape for fear of his might,
a missing link he had become, to serve the colonisers' plight.
Yes, as they've tried to put out the Light.

Uprooted from the soil of birth, the children of the Archipelago were sought to be tempered and honed into submission to a power foreign from their own.

However, this was not to be;
Al-Fakir, Al-Hakir Abdullah bin Qadi Abdus-Salam
had a message to the Cape – Destiny...

Allahu, Allaahu... Allaaa h.

Yes! Inscribed on his heart, never to be destroyed – Revelation.
Al-Quran, a message to humanity from The Compassionate, The All-Pervasive Lord, in captivity, on paper he had put to illumine...

And unshackle the chains around the oppressed mind.
Master and slave alike, history bears testimony, that many a heart from bondage his teachings has emancipate.
From the humble beginnings of children's rhymes:

Alif dettis a, Alif bouwa I,

Alif dappan u a, I, u into a consciousness of;

Allah, Ikhlas, Ukhuwwah

it grew.

Tuan Guru, Al-Islam in the Light of Marifat Allah, thus, had to foreign soil brought.

Immortal in the memories and hearts of those whose blood does roar:

Allahu, Allaahu... Allaaa h.

Rabi-ul-Awwal 1414.

August 1993

CHAPTER SEVEN

From Dar al-Islam to a Place of Sadness: Understanding the struggles of Tuan Guru of Tidore at the Cape of Good Hope 1780-1807

Shafiq Morton

Abstract

Tuan Guru, the Master Teacher, otherwise known as Imam ‘Abdallah ibn Qadi ‘Abd al-Salam al-Shattariyya of Tidore, a descendant of Sunan Gunung Jati and the blessed Prophet Muhammad as well as a member of the Tidore royal family, is our first urban Muslim activist; this is due to him having established South Africa’s first madrasah and mosque in Dorp Street, Cape Town, after 1793. Tuan Guru was exiled to the Cape from Batavia in 1780 on allegations of siding with the British against the Dutch. Whilst Shaykh Yusuf of Makasar (exiled to the Cape in 1694) is seen as the iconic figure of South African Islam, it was Tuan Guru who inscribed the Qur’an on Robben Island to lighten the slave master’s whip, and who wrote a 613-page text, known as the Ma’rifat, to lift their spirits. His madrasah, the first formal education offered to slaves at the Cape, is what created the Cape Muslim community and its unique global identity. Tuan Guru’s madrasah brought people together from Africa, Asia, Europe and the Far East. Tuan Guru knew well that physical resistance against the Dutch would be futile. He had realised that by educating the slaves and giving them dignity through faith, he would not only be following a Prophetic injunction and his duties as a scholar, but that he would be actively undermining the Europeans under their noses. In this essay, we discuss Tuan Guru’s approach at the Cape, rooted in the wasatiyya of the Ba ‘Alawi tradition, which he so ably represented, and take a look at how he embedded his resistance in his written texts; ones that he knew, the Dutch would never bother to read.

Keywords: Tuan Guru, Tidore, Cabo de Goede Hoop, Madrasa, Masjid, Ma’rifat

1. Exile to Cabo de Goede Hoop

When Tuan Guru, together with Qadi ‘Abd al-Rauf, the scribe Badr al-Din and the secretary Nur al-Din, stepped ashore at the Cabo de Goede Hoop (Cape of Good Hope or modern-day Cape Town) on 7 April 1780 after 70 days at sea on the Zeepard, they would have seen the torture wheel and the gallows situated near the Castle of Cabo de Goede Hoop (also referred to as the Cape) gates – a chilling welcome to exile. They would have faced the impressive amphitheatre of the iconic Table Mountain looming above them, the Castle ramparts to the left, and to their right, warehouses, and shipyards. Behind them would have been whitewashed townhouses with green shutters and thatched roofs.¹

Cabo de Goede Hoop, a half-way station for Dutch East India Company ships en-route between Amsterdam and Batavia (now modern-day Jakarta), had been established by the company official, Jan van Riebeeck, in 1652. The Dutch East India Company, which was popularly called the Vereenigde Oostelike Companie (VOC), was an European multi-national corporation established in 1602; it was headquartered at the Hague, and it was a corporate-colonial entity with state-like powers. It offered its shareholders a staggering 50 percent return on investment.²

The Cape had become a favourite place of political exile for the VOC, which had understandably met with resistance when it ventured into the waters of the Southeast Asian Archipelago (now known as Indonesia) in search of spices. The VOC would exile 182 of the Orang Cayen, the ruling nobility of the island chain, to the Cape from 1658 to 1795.³ 18th century Cabo de Goede Hoop was a scruffy settlement in a postcard setting. Raw sewage ran in the streets whilst drunken sailors and soldiers brawled in its taverns. At the top of Adderley Street, Company slaves were housed in the Slave Lodge where its women were sought out for sexual favours.⁴ When Tuan Guru arrived, there were 5, 510 colonists, 6, 279 slaves, and 400 free blacks, or Mardyckers, at the Cape.⁵

Cabo de Goede Hoop in Tuan Guru's day lacked the urbane nature of Amsterdam, or the exotic pretences of Batavia. Sultan Jamal al-Din of Tidore, his two sons and four courtiers, including Tuan Guru, had been sent to Batavia on suspicion of having connived with the English against the Dutch in 1779. Of interest is that Thomaszen, the overzealous Dutch governor of Ternate that was a close neighbour to Tidore, felt he had sniffed out a Maluku conspiracy. And whilst the Ternatans and the Tidorese had thoroughly resented Dutch overlordship, no evidence of active collusion with the British to foment an uprising has ever surfaced.⁶

Sultan Jamal al-Din's sons, Kamal al-Din and Zain al-'Abidin, were sent to Ceylon – another favourite place of exile – after seven months in Batavia, breaking the heart of the Sultan who was forced to stay behind. Three months later, a VOC official dispatched four of his courtiers and imams to the Cape.⁷ One of Sultan Jamal al-Din's sons who was not taken into custody, Amir al-Din, would become the rallying point of Moluccan resistance, and would give the Dutch a royal headache. Also called Prince Nuku, or Jou Barakati, he would become the 'Saladin of the Spice Islands', and fight the Dutch for over 20 years, recapturing Tidore and liberating Ternate.⁸

Back at the Cape, the population was diverse. VOC employees were drawn from all over Europe – Scandinavia, Russia, England, France, Switzerland, Germany, and Holland. The slave population hailed from West Africa, Angola, Mozambique, Madagascar, the Swahili coast, India's Malabar and Coromandel regions, the Indonesian archipelago, and Ceylon.⁹ It was into this admixture of peoples, colours and creeds that Tuan Guru found himself thrust by the VOC. However, when Tuan Guru's party arrived, the company clerks were literally at sea not knowing what to do with their four new arrivals. Their papers were still on the Vrouw Everhardina, which was 12 days away from Cape Town. We do not know whether exile on Robben Island, the "Alcatraz" of Table Bay 11 kms from Cape Town, was Batavia's original plan for Tuan Guru, or whether a distant Boland farmstead was – as in the case of the Rajah of Tambora in 1697, or distant Constantia, to where the last Sultan of Malacca had been banished.

2. Robben Island and the escape of Qadi ‘Abd al-Rauf and Nur al-Iman

Whatever the case, Robben Island – “the island of the seals” – was where Tuan Guru was dispatched on 11 April, just less than 48 hours after having landed. Oval in shape and 5 square kilometres in size, Robben Island was a treeless, windswept and storm-tossed rock, once the tip of a Cambrian Age mountain. It hosted 130 prisoners, nine of them exiles, together with 26 soldiers and 12 permanent residents. And whilst the royal exiles were given a stipend of five rixdollars per month and did not have to break their backs in the lime quarry, life was not easy. Eugenius Manappo, the former regent of Bolang and Magando, complained of an unlit, leaky hut and built stone models on the beach to keep his sanity.¹⁰ The following year in May, the news reached the Castle – via the VOC’s French allies – that a British fleet under Commodore George Johnson had set sail for the Cape. Fearing the vulnerability of Robben Island, the VOC had transferred its prisoners to the Slave Lodge and hospital on the mainland.¹¹

Tuan Guru’s own writings reveal that he was relocated together with seven royal Melayu Archipelago exiles to Saldanah Bay west of Cabo de Goede Hoop. There the governor, Joachim van Plettenberg, had hidden six Indiamen. The captains were under orders to scuttle their ships if the British approached. Commodore Johnson captured four Dutch vessels after a brief skirmish in July 1781. Four of the exiles, two Ternatan princes and two of Tuan Guru’s companions, Qadi ‘Abd al-Rauf and Nur al-Iman, escaped in a rowboat and were rescued by Johnson, who took them to South Asia’s Madras. Tuan Guru and Badr al-Din were forced to walk back to the Cape, a journey of 152 kilometres, which took 15 days.¹² Whilst serving two stints on Robben Island (1780-81) and 1786-1791), Tuan Guru got to know well the bitterness of life at the Cape. The slaves, abducted from homes they would never return to, did not arrive at the Cabo de Goede Hoop as refugees, migrants or settlers. They were traded like cattle and they were herded into the fetid holds of rotting death ships; and in the process, they would also endure immense psychological brutality.¹³

Susan Newton-King writes that “isolated and uprooted” the slaves suffered a complete “social death”. Their identities were erased by officialdom, and they would have to endure the distress of not even having their own names to defend.¹⁴ Travellers such as Mirza Abu Taleb Khan and Johannes Stavorinus have observed that the treatment of the slaves at the Cape was extremely harsh.¹⁵ In 1780, Tuan Guru wrote out a copy (mushaf) of the Qur’an from memory whilst on Robben Island. It was, I believe, his first act of public resistance. It was designed to lighten the master’s burden and to rally the broken people around him. Tuan Guru would go on to write out five copies of the Qur’an, but the first one would be the most significant. Not only would it signal his intention to teach the slaves and convicts about faith and dignity, but that he realised they desperately needed comforting in their alien and hostile environment. This is borne out by Hajji Imam Muding, a 19th century imam and the son of a slave, who told the 1825 Crown-instituted Colebrook and Bigge Commission on slavery that the imams had taught the slaves to believe that their spirits were free. In other words, the God-fearing slave would only have to endure the horrors of the material world for a short while before entering Paradise.

3. The Ma'rifat and sent back to Robben Island

From 1781 onwards, Tuan Guru worked on a 613-page Shafi'i-based teaching compendium on Islam and Sufism, which became known as the Ma'rifat (the Knowledge [of God]).¹⁶ His ambitions of community building had to be put on hold, though, when in November 1786, he was banished to Robben Island for a second time. A few months previously, a Javanese convict called Surabrata had completed his sentence and asked to return home. When denied his right by VOC officials, he had run “amok”¹⁷, fatally stabbing seven people in the street before being apprehended. A month previously, a band of runaway slaves had murdered the family of a farmer, Sebastiaan Rothman. This, together with Surabrata's defiance, had set off alarm in the European community.

To allay the population's fears of slave rebellion, the authorities cut off the dying Surabrata's hands and used them to beat him in his face. The military then hunted down the Rothman family killers, stringing them up on the Grand Parade and skinning them alive. To send a further message, the VOC sent Tuan Guru together with eight prominent exiles back to the island together with Tuan Nuruman of Cirebon. Tuan Nuruman, better known as “Paay Schaaapie”, had written protective Jawi talismans for the runaways.¹⁸ Of course, what the authorities were not saying was that the Orang Cayen from the time of Tuan Abdurrahman Matebe Shah in 1658 had been actively encouraging the slaves to run away from their masters. They knew all too well how a restive labour force could undermine the economy at the Cape.¹⁹

It was only in 1791, ten years after his arrival, that a 79-year-old Tuan Guru – forbidden from returning home “tot nader orde”²⁰ – was able to settle in Cabo de Goede Hoop. He married Keijda or Cayda (Khadijah?) van de Kaap, most likely the daughter of a slave called Layer van Balij; and in 1793, he founded the first madrasah at the Cape. He did this in the Dorp Street warehouse of another freed slave, Coridon of Ceylon.²¹ The founding of the madrasah was an extraordinary achievement given the prevailing anti-education sentiments at the time. A measure of this is Reverend John Phillips of the London Missionary Society observing in 1820 that slave owners were against their charges being educated, even as Christians. He reported a 12-year-old slave girl having her Bible study books confiscated. One mistress maintained that the “creatures” (the slaves) would gain no good from reading the Bible. An unidentified slave revealed that if he admitted to being at school “the sjambok” (a leather whip) was “immediately taken down from behind the door...”²² The slaves, as we have already indicated, hailed from locations such as West Africa, Angola, Mozambique, Madagascar, the Swahili coast, India's Malabar and Coromandel regions, the Melayu Archipelago and Ceylon.²³ What Tuan Guru did by establishing the colony's first madrasah, was to bring all these people under one roof.

4. South Africa's first madrasah is established in Dorp Street

Initially using Melayu as its lingua-franca, Tuan Guru's madrasah established a new creolised Muslim identity at the foot of Africa, the Cape Muslim. The uniqueness of this community is borne out by the research of historian, Patrick Tariq Mellet, who revealed that it culturally became “Malay” but had over 100 ancestral points of origin.²⁴ It is evident that Tuan Guru, describing himself as living in the “the Cape of unbelief”,²⁵ was not prepared to tolerate the marginalisation of his people. This was against the backdrop of the Statute of India banning the practice of any faith except the Dutch Reformed one, and the barely concealed racism of the colonisers.²⁶ For after establishing his school, Tuan Guru had moved to build South Africa’s first mosque.

Unfortunately, despite letters permitting this from the Dutch Governor, Jan Willem Janssens, and the British General, James Henry Craig, he found himself frustrated at every quarter. The VOC had entrenched a class privilege that the local whites, themselves mixed of origin (albeit European)²⁷ were not going to relinquish. The bane of the slaves and free blacks’ lives was that the court prosecutors, or fiscals, could raid their dwellings at whim and arrest them without a warrant.²⁸ Tuan Guru’s nominated successor, Achmat van Bengalen, told the Colebrook and Bigge Commission²⁹ that an official called Denaus, had stolen their letters in such raids. Even in 1800, when the effete English governor Sir George Yonge had urged the Burgher Senate to discuss the building of a mosque after a petition by Frans van Bengalen, its representatives had ignored him.³⁰ Facing the double-barrelled prejudice of race and religion,³¹ a defiant Tuan Guru had already led the first public prayers in the Chiappini Street quarry in 1797. Interestingly, there are no records of anyone preventing him, a number of commentators noting that Muslim religious observances took place in the quarry without incident.³²

In any case, the early Cape Muslims used to pray, celebrate the Prophet Muhammad’s □ birthday, and perform the blade wielding *Ratiep*³³ in their houses, so it is most likely that Tuan Guru simply indulged in subterfuge on the mosque question. Despite Denaus’ raids, Tuan Guru could have secretly used the madrasah as a mosque until its official recognition in July 1804 by the Batavian administration (1803-06) when the Statute of India was finally abolished.³⁴ There were no minarets in the Cape until the late 19th century, and the Dorp Street premises would have looked just like any other building.³⁵

Apart from introducing Qur’anic memorisation and basic Islamic education in Cabo de Goede Hoop’s first non-racial school, Tuan Guru formed a structured administration, which, due to the marginalised political status of the community, became its leadership. As an acknowledged scholar with a courtly background, Tuan Guru was able to appoint himself as the qadi, or chief imam. This was the Javanese model, which was a variation of the traditional role of a qadi, usually a purely juridical one. Tuan Guru also employed teachers, imams, khatibs (assistant imams) and “bilals” (mu’adhdhins).³⁶

5. Tuan Guru’s substantial legacy of a unifying social infrastructure

By his death in 1807, Tuan Guru had left behind a substantial legacy. It was a unifying social infrastructure that had not existed before: Muslim slaves and free blacks were an informal, but organised community. And despite no official recognition, could now receive an education, get married, name their children, and bury their dead. Given the conditions at the Cape, Tuan Guru's achievements are striking. Disobeying the Statute of India as he did, together with imams such as Tuan Sayyid 'Alawi,³⁷ could have had fatal consequences. And whilst the Dutch appeared to have eventually embraced an out of sight, out of mind policy on the question of the Statute, Tuan Guru did succeed in creating a new community.

It is my view that Tuan Guru's apparent political passiveness – judging by the correspondences of the day – was not a weakness, but more a policy of realpolitik. Being strident in the face of the VOC or the British colonial authorities would not have achieved much. Indeed, Auwais Rafudeen noted that within Tuan Guru's "pietism", there was an embedded critique directed against the colonial authorities.³⁸ He had more courtly skills than the Europeans his people were forced to serve. But he knew well that any whiff of political restlessness detected outside of the bounds of the Muslim community would be akin to poking a stick in a beehive. Shaykh Seraj Hendricks of the Azzawia Institute explained that the da'wah, or propagation, practiced by the Cape's early imams – such as Shaykh Yusuf of Makasar and Tuan Guru – was informed by a wasatiyya approach.³⁹ Wasatiyya was the classical approach of justice, balance, and reason. As the Prophetic way, it was not confrontational. The great Imam 'Abdallah al-Haddad would write:

*Know that we move only on the widest straight path, which raises no concerns from anyone...he who examines the method of the family of the Ba 'Alawi will recognise it for the moderate middle way which cannot be objected to...*⁴⁰

This was Tuan Guru's secret, to attract those open to belief but not to offend those who were hostile to it. What he did effectively, then, was to stay under the radar. This tradition had been borne through his Hadhramaut Ba 'Alawi forefathers; pioneers who had landed in Sumatra and Java centuries previously. As descendants of the Prophet ﷺ, and as Islam's greatest proselytisers, the Ba 'Alawi had always focused on the heart via Imam al-Ghazali's text the Ihya' 'Ulum al-Din (the Revival of the Islamic Sciences). For Imam al-Ghazali, ritual without heart knowledge was ignorance. It is this ethos that Tuan Guru introduced to the Cape. The slaves had to know what their faith meant, and they had to know how to use it to restore their dignity.

6. Doors of the Ma'rifat

It was via his *Ma'rifat*⁴¹ that Tuan Guru taught the slaves how to face the world. An eclectic mix of classical theology (kalam) rooted in the concept of Tawhid, basic Shafi'i law, Prophetic tradition (Hadith), Prophetic encomium (riwayat), prayers (du'ah), talismanic cures (azimats) and Sufi litanies (awrad); my sense is that the Ma'rifat was designed to be a teaching primer. In his introduction, Tuan Guru described himself in Sufi tradition as "Al-Faqir al-Haqir" (the Poor and Humble Servant) before saying that he is "gharib fi balad ul-kuffar" (a stranger in a land of unbelief). His first phrase was conventional scholarly protocol, but the second one was not – and is a telling commentary on his situation. The Ma'rifat has been written in distinct sections, or independent chapters. Tuan Guru signed off each one with a calligraphic vee, or inverted triangle. It is in those postscripts, as the details end with an “amin” at the tip, that Tuan Guru revealed glimpses of his true feelings in a place where the reader, but not the authorities, would see them.

In one codicil, Tuan Guru signed off in 1786 as “‘Abdullah Tidore fi balad ul-kahf fi makan ul-huzn” (‘Abdullah Tidore from the Cape, a place of sadness). The Ma’rifat section concluded with the “wronged imam”, the son of the “wronged master, Qadi ‘Abd al-Salam”, adding that Tuan Guru is Tidorese by birth, Shafi’i by legal school, and Ash’ari by doctrine. The text is masterful in bolstering faith and repelling oppression. For after beginning with a Qur’anic du’ah, Tuan Guru quoted verses that promise the removal of the “evil eye”. The first is from the Qur’anic Chapter titled ‘The Believers’ (40: 57) which says that the heavens and the earth, created by God, are greater than humanity – thus indicating the scope of Divine power, as opposed to man’s innate feebleness on this earth.

Then, Tuan Guru added other verses; this time from the Chapter titled ‘The Kingdom’ (67: 3-4). These verses challenge us to look for flaws in Allah’s Creation, and that our gaze will be exhausted by this vain exercise. This shows us that by contemplating God’s perfection and contemplating His Majesty we will realise that no mortal power (in this case the slave master) will ever be able to diminish it. What is curious here is that Tuan Guru could have used a number of other Qur’anic verses for the same purpose of warding off the evil eye – such as the Qur’an’s three final chapters called the Mu’awwidhatan – but has instead selected verses with a specific context of Godly power (that existed over the slave masters).

Tuan Guru moved on to entrench the absolute sovereignty of Allah by narrating from Abu Hanifah (who was unjustly imprisoned) by quoting eight verses from the Chapter of the Hajj. As we read them, various Divine Attributes are revealed: the Provider, the Knower, the Forgiver, the Hearer and Seer, the Greatest, the Kindest, the Exposer of Truth, the Absolute and the Merciful. Apart from the Divine Attributes of Allah being made manifest to the student, the verses proclaim that Allah will provide for those who have endured suffering and oppression. An African or Southeast Asian slave sitting in the Dorp Street madrasah would have immediately got the drift.

The Ma’rifat has many doors – too many to enter here – but some of them open us to the domains of the hizb, or the wird, a special litany recited for succour or success. These, penned by some of the greatest figures in Islam, have been used around the Muslim world for centuries to soothe the heart, to alleviate grief and to remove suffering. The Du’ah al-Sayfi, the Prayer of the Divine Sword, was written by the 11th century saint, Shaykh ‘Abd al-Qadir Jilani, and every Shattariyya Shaykh, like Tuan Guru, was authorised to perform it. This powerfully uplifting work is found in the Ma’rifat.

7. Famous Sufi litanies

We also see a famous wird of the 12th century Anadalusin mystic, Ibn al-‘Arabi, the Hizb ul-Wiqaya or the Al-Dawr al-‘Ala (The Orison of Protection). It is said that if we learn it by heart, we become safe from all tribulations. As we already know, the Shattariyya Sufis were also adherents of Ibn al-‘Arabi. Then, there are litanies in the Ma’rifat written by the 12th century Moroccan master, Imam Abul Hasan al-Shadhili. They include the Hizb ul-Bahr (The Litany of the Ocean), recited to the imam by the Prophet ﷺ in a dream. It is a comforting liturgy, promising the reciter protection, as well as calming his fretful heart and dispelling jinn. The Hizb ul-Barr, the Litany of Benefit, is found in the Ma'rifat too. These awrad would have strengthened the slaves and lifted their souls.

Space precludes us from a discussion on the role that the talismans, or 'azeemats, played in the community. Tuan Guru used to carry a sliver box in which was a book of invocations; and from this, he would write on pieces of paper for his congregants. Tuan Guru also used selected Hadith to illustrate what the key tenets of Islam were, and then proceeded to inform the reader how to understand various aspects of belief. This section of the Ma'rifat was written in the traditional 'question and answer' format and this practice was something the slave would have been able to identify with:

If you are asked: whose progeny are you? Say: I am the child of Adam, may peace rest peace on him. If you are asked: which is your religious community? Say: I am in the community of Abraham ﷺ. If you are asked: what is your nation? Say: I am (from) the nation of Muhammad ﷺ, ...

The text addressed various doctrinal questions. In fact, a slave regarded as illiterate by the colonists, but armed with the Ma'rifat, would have proved a formidable prospect for any inquisitorial European. Finally, Tuan Guru knew that the colonial authorities were too arrogant or too lazy to learn Melayu or Arabic, let alone read foreign religious texts, and so he could use the du'ah – which he did in the Ma'rifat – to raise morale, and to challenge the status quo.

The du'ah, Tuan Guru wrote, would help with afflictions that have descended and those about to descend. With regard to the former, they would be removed; and as regards the latter, they would be deflected.⁴² Here are some concluding examples:

*O Allah (may You) protect me from every devil, every ruler and every human being...from the evil of the devil and the ruler...That the oppressor, tyrant or compeller who wrongs me tastes the misfortune of Allah's punishment...*⁴³

*And let them taste, O One who harms, O One who causes death, an exemplary punishment, worry, and disappearance. So root out the people who have oppressed...*⁴⁴

*And I seek refuge in you, O Lord. From the tyranny of every tyrant, and the injustice of every unjust one, and the envy of the envious one, and the schemes of every scheming one, and the oppression of every oppressor ...*⁴⁵

8. Bibliography

8.1 Books, Chapters, and Journal Articles

al-Badawi, Mostafa. 2013. A Blessed Valley. Guidance Media.

Andaya, Leonard. 1993. The World of Maluku. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press.

Baartman, Teun. 2019. Cape Conflict, Protests and political alliances in a Dutch settlement.
Cape Town: UCT Press.

Da Costa, Yusuf & Achmat Davids. 1994. Pages from Cape Muslim History.
Pietermaritzburg:

Shuter and Shooter.

Da Costa, Yusuf. 1985. Islam in Greater Cape Town: a Study in the Geography of the Region.

UNISA, Pretoria, D.Litt et Phil dissertation.

Ergang, Robert. 1967. Europe from Renaissance to Waterloo. Lexington-Massachusetts: DC
Heath and Company.

Khan, Mirza Abu Taleb. 1814. The Travels of Mirza Abu Taleb Khan, Africa, Asia and Europe.
London: Longman, London.

Laffan, Michael . 2017. From Javanese Court to African Grave: How Noriman Became Tuan Skapie, 1717-1806. In Journal of Indian Ocean World Studies. 1: 38-59.

Mahida, Ebrahim Mahomed. 1993. History of Muslims in South Africa: a Chronology.
Durban:
Arabic Study Circle.

Mellet, Patrick Tariq. 2020. The Lie of 1652: A decolonised history of land. Cape Town:
Tafelberg.

Morton, Shafiq. 2019. From the Spice Islands to Cape Town: The Life and Times of Tuan Guru.
Cape Town: Awqaf SA. 2nd Ed.

Newton-King, Susan . 2012. Family, friendship and survival amongst freed slaves. In From Cape Town between East and West, Social identities in a Dutch colonial town, (Ed. Nigel Worden). Auckland Park, Sunnyside: Jacana Media.

Rafudeen, Auwais. 2004. The Compendium of Tuan Guru, Translation and Contextualisation.

Introduction. Pretoria: National Research Foundation.

Rhode, Ebrahim. 2019. Islamic dawah at the Cape during the Dutch and British Colonial period 1652-1842. Cape Town: Self-Published.

Shell, Robert. 2006. Madresahs and Moravians. Muslim educational institutions in the Cape Colony, 1792 to 1910. In New Contree. 51: May.

8.2 Other Documents

Colebrooke Bigge Commission, January 1825

Gordon, Robert. View of Robben Island from the East.

<https://www.robertjacobgordon.nl/drawings/rp-t-1914-17-23>. Accessed 22/3/18.

Lussana, Sergio. Emotions and the "Big Picture" in the History of Slavery, <https://networks.h-net.org/node/11465/discussions/158655/emotions-and-slavery-studies-1-emotions-and-big-picture-history>. Accessed 7/12/19.

Salie, Ebrahim. Orientalism, European Hegemony, Christianity and Islam in the Western Cape, South Africa, circa 1806-1880s. WhatsApp 3/4/21.

Viljoen, Russel. "Cape of Execution": The gallows at the Cape of Good Hope as represented in the colonial art of Johannes Rach and Lady Anne Barnard. Online: file:///D:/Hanging%20and%20violence%20early%20Cape%20Viljoen_Cape\(2011\).pdf.pdf). Accessed 7/12/19.

Endnotes

¹ Cape Town in the 1700s. http://www.capetown.at/heritage/history/voc_1700s.htm. Accessed 16/3/18

² Ebrahim Rhode, Islamic dawah at the Cape during the Dutch and British Colonial period 1652-1842, Cape Town: Self-Published, 2019, p.4; hereafter: Rhode, Islamic dawah at the Cape Rhode quoted Robert Ergang, Europe from Renaissance to Waterloo, p. 305. Lexington-Massachusetts, DC Heath and Company, 1967.

³ Ebrahim Mahomed Mahida, History of Muslims in South Africa: a Chronology, . Durban: Arabic Study Circle, 1993, p.14. Based on Yusuf da Costa, Islam in Greater Cape Town: a Study in the Geography of the Region. UNISA, Pretoria, D.Litt et Phil dissertation (unpublished) 1985.

⁴ Robert Shell, The lodge women of Cape Town, 1671 to 1795, p. 249, From Diaspora to Diaroma, Ancestry24, Cape Town 2009. Gabeba Baderoon in her book, Regarding Muslims, from slavery to post-apartheid, writes about slavery and the huge significance of sexual violence at the Slave Lodge shaping contemporary cultural perceptions in a chapter entitled, Sexual geographies of the Cape: slavery, race and sexual violence. Wits University Press, 2014.

⁵ <http://www.sahistory.org.za/article/general-south-african-history-timeline-1700s>. Accessed 16/3/18.

⁶ Leonard Andaya, The World of Maluku. University of Hawaii Press, Honolulu 1993, p.219.

⁷ Ebrahim Salie, Imam Abdullah bin Qadi Abdus-Salam and comrades banished to Cabo de Goede Hoop, pp.534-580 [47pp.]. Unpublished 2015.

⁸ Shafiq Morton, From the Spice Islands to Cape Town: The Life and Times of Tuan Guru, (Second Edition), Cape Town: Awqaf SA, Cape Town, 2nd Edition, 2019, pp. 63-64. Hereafter: Morton, From the Spice Islands to Cape Town.

⁹ Yusuf da Costa, Pages from Cape Muslim History, Pietermaritzburg: Shuter and Shooter, 1994, p. 2, Table 1.1 and 1.2.

¹⁰ Robert Gordon, View of Robben Island from the East. <https://www.robertjacobgordon.nl/drawings/rp-t-1914-17-23>. Accessed 22/3/18.

¹¹ Morton, From the Spice Islands to Cape Town pp. 63-64.

¹² Letter discovered in papers of Tuan Guru at the home of Aasieya Jassiem nee Abderoof, by her son, ‘Abdul Basit, 4 May 2018 and translated by Prof Michael Laffan, Princeton University

¹³ Sergio Lussana, Emotions and the “Big Picture” in the History of Slavery, <https://networks.h-net.org/node/11465/discussions/158655/emotions-and-slavery-studies-1-emotions-and-big-picture-history>. Accessed 7/12/19.

¹⁴ Susan Newton-King, Family, friendship and survival amongst freed slaves, From Cape Town between East and West, Social identities in a Dutch colonial town, edited by Nigel Worden. Auckland Park, Sunnyside: Jacana Media 2012, p.155.

¹⁵ Mirza Abu Taleb Khan, Chapter IV, The Travels of Mirza Abu Taleb Khan, Africa, Asia and Europe, London: Longman, London 1814. <https://archive.org/details/travelsmirzaabu01khgoog/page/n7>. Accessed 7/12/19.

Russel Viljoen, “Cape of Execution”: The gallows at the Cape of Good Hope as represented in the colonial art of Johannes Rach and Lady Anne Barnard, file:///D:/Hanging%20and%20violence%20early%20Cape%20Viljoen_Cape\(2011\).pdf.pdf). Accessed 7/12/19.

¹⁶ This is a title created by the late Dr Achmat Davids. It is based on a section of the compendium which deals with issues of theology. This has become the convenient moniker for Tuan Guru’s work.

¹⁷ This is an Indonesian term linguistically. Surabrata’s actions were an act of resistance. Running “amok” was a distinct strategy of resistance aimed at the colonisers by convicts and slaves.

¹⁸ Michael Laffan, *From Javanese Court to African Grave: How Noriman Became Tuan Skapie, 1717-1806*In Journal of Indian Ocean World Studies, 1: 38-59, 2017.

¹⁹ This is the thesis of historian Ebrahim Rhoda. See Rhoda, Islamic dawah at the Cape , pp. 7 & 15. Quoting Worden and Groenewald, Trials of Slavery.

²⁰ Until further orders.

²¹ Achmat Davids, Pages from Cape Muslim History, p. 50.

²² Ebrahim Salie, Orientalism, European Hegemony, Christianity and Islam in the Western Cape, South Africa, circa 1806-1880s, pp. 107-108. WhatsApp 3/4/21.

²³ Yusuf da Costa & Achmat Davids, Pages from Cape Muslim History, p. 2, Table 1.1 and 1.2

²⁴ Patrick Tariq Mellet, The Lie of 1652, A decolonised history of land, Cape Town: Tafelberg, 2020, pp. 308 and 332.

²⁵ Tuan Guru’s words in the codicils of the Ma’rifat and his own writings.

²⁶ All religions except the Dutch Reformed one were prohibited on the pain of death, though evidence does seem to reveal that in practice the Dutch seemed to be content with the “out of sight, out of mind” approach. See Ebrahim Mahomed Mahida, History of Muslims in South Africa: A Chronology, p. 2.

²⁷ Teun Baartman, Cape Conflict, Protests and political alliances in a Dutch settlement, Cape Town: UCT Press, 2019, p.52. VOC company officials were never exclusively “Dutch”. The VOC hired from all around Europe. The dichotomy of British–Dutch is often far too simplistic an equation.

²⁸ S. A. Rochlin, Early Arabic Printing at the Cape of Good Hope, In Bulletin of School of Oriental Studies, Vol VII, part 1, p. 52. <https://www.ghazali.org/articles/bsmes-7-1-33-sar.pdf>. Accessed 18/4/18. Also see: Shafiq Morton, From the Spice Islands to Cape Town: The Life and Times of Tuan Guru, p.70.

²⁹ Colebrooke Bigge Commission, January 1825, p. 109.

³⁰ Morton, From the Spice Islands to Cape Town, p. 95.

³¹ This term is borrowed from Robert Shell, Madresahs and Moravians. Muslim educational institutions in the Cape Colony, 1792 to 1910, In New Contree, no. 51 (May 2006).

³² John Mayson, George Theal et al.

³³ Also known as the ‘Khalifah’, ‘Dabus’ or ‘Ratib’, the Ratiep is an expression of Sufi mysticism derived from the great 12th century mystic and saint, Sayyid Ahmad al-Rifa’i, who when visiting the tomb of the Prophet was seen by others having his hand miraculously shaken by the Prophet. Ratiep made its first appearance in Cape Town over 300 years ago, brought by slaves and exiles. Most scholars say from Indonesia, but it is my belief that it also came from the Swahili coast. In the performance, members of the group recite prayers and qasidah to the accompaniment of drums, whilst others enter a mystical state that allows them to strike themselves with swords and daggers without causing harm, thereby demonstrating the power of faith. Whilst not condoned as a useful practice by some scholars, those of the more literalist persuasion, such as the Wahhabis, starkly deem the Ratiep as rank unbelief. Historian Prof Michael Laffan believes that the Ratiep bolstered the spirits of the slaves.

³⁴ Achmat Davids, Pages from Cape Muslim History, p. 61.

³⁵ Morton, From the Spice Islands to Cape Town, p. 98..

³⁶ The former African slave, Bilal ibn Rabah al-Habashi (580–640 CE), was one of the most trusted and loyal Companions of the Prophet Muhammad. Bilal, the first mu’adh-hin, used to call the faithful to prayer in a beautiful and resonant voice.

³⁷ Tuan Sayyid ‘Alawi (d.1803) arrived at the Cape in 1744 and originally hailed from Mocca in Yemen. He used to smuggle himself into the Slave Lodge at night and teach the slaves. The guards could never catch him.

³⁸ Auwais Rafudeen, The Compendium of Tuan Guru, Translation and Contextualisation, Introduction. Pretoria: National Research Foundation, 2004. Hereafter: Rafudeen, The Compendium.

³⁹ “And thus, we have made you a wasat (a moderate) community...” Qur’an 2: 143. Abu Hurayrah reported: The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said, “The religion is easy, and whoever makes the religion difficult, it will overpower him. So, follow a middle course; if you cannot do this, do something near to it and give glad tidings and seek Allah’s help at dawn and at dusk and some part of the night”. Bukhari.

⁴⁰ Mostafa al-Badawi, A Blessed Valley, . Guidance Media 2013, pp. 185-187.

⁴¹ The title is derived by Achmat Davids based on Tuan Guru’s section on Tawhid, Ma’rifat al-Islam wal Iman (The Knowledge of Islam and Faith) based on Imam Sanusi’s work Umm ul-Barahin (The Mother of all Proofs).

⁴² Adapted from the translation of Auwais Rafudeen, The Compendium, p. 123.

⁴³ Rafudeen, The Compendium, p. 54 (taken from p. 96 in the original text).

⁴⁴ Rafudeen, The Compendium, p. 54 (taken from p. 202-203 in the original text). 4

⁴⁵ Rafudeen, The Compendium, p. 54 (taken from p. 265 in the original text). Parts of the du’ahs have been slightly edited to enhance their flow without detracting from the original meaning.

CHAPTER EIGHT

Tuan Guru's Educational influence on the colonial Cape Muslims (circa 18th and 19th centuries): A Synopsis

Ebrahim Salie

Abstract

This essay narrates the teachings of Imam ‘Abdullah bin Qadi Abdus-Salam that fundamentally influenced how Muslims experienced and comprehended the world at Cabo de Goede Hope during the late 18th and early 19th-century colonial Cape Town. Thus, I will focus on the following: waging an inner “holy struggle”; implementing of diverse modes of faith and the Twenty Attributes of God against the backdrop of Asha’ri theology, and displaying pride in “indigenous, diasporic practises and traditions”(adat) of the Melayu Archipelago, bent on: creating a new “Muslimness”, effecting a social revolution—a world diametrically opposed to the “world of the infidel (kafir)”—and on consolidating the Muslim faith, Islamic identity and Islamic consciousness in Protestant colonial Cape Town. Unlike Shaykh Yūsuf Al-Makassārī who ceaselessly waged jihād (“holy war”) against the remnants of paganism and VOC oppression in the East Indies, bent on implementing Muslim practises in custom (‘adat)-controlled Sulawesi and elsewhere, Imam ‘Abdullah desired the “creation of a new man”—a man endowed with a new consciousness, stripped of paganism, and “infidel” practices, but tied to the Qur’an and the lifestyle of the Prophet and His companions, only, in a colonial, VOC-dominated, and an essentially Protestant society. Both language and vocabulary of Imam Abdullah bin Qadi Abdus-Salam’s Ash’ari discourse were couched in idioms and metaphors vis-à-vis God’s Mercy to will Justice. Muslims turn to God’s power in the end; a power that can also cause suffering, but He does not wish suffering. Thus, Muslims never saw themselves as slaves of the Dutch, but as slaves of God—their bodies were enslaved, but not their souls. Hence, they lived their daily lives by showing faith in Allah. Emancipation gave them freedom from the physical control and brutality of the colonial masters (the minor “holy war”), but inner peace (the “greater holy struggle”) was now possible, as it became the natural consequence of total submission to the Will of Allah.

Key Words: Tuan Guru, Ash’arism, Allah’s Will, Doctrine of Faith (imān), Universal Teachings, Twenty Attributes, Short Supplication (du’a), Radical Social Transformation, Talisman with Power, Cabo de Goede Hoop.

1. Introduction

In this essay, I use primary and secondary sources to narrate the teachings of Imam ‘Abdullah bin Qadi ‘Abdus-Salam (commonly referred to as Tuan Guru). The Imam’s life at Cabo de Goede Hoop, centred on imprisonment, writing, dissemination, and on waging an “inner holy struggle”. Tuan Guru’s teachings fundamentally influenced how Muslims experienced and comprehended the secular (western) world. These Muslims' engagement, however, reflect their subjectivity, reveal their identity, and show their consciousness within the context of late 18th and early 19th-century colonial Cabo de Goede Hoop.

Tuan Guru's educational wisdoms focussed on the (a) waging of an inner 'holy war', (b) implementing of diverse modes of faith that are embedded in 'Ash'ari theological thought that stress the importance of God's twenty attributes, and (c) displaying pride in "indigenous, diasporic practises and traditions" (adat) of the Melayu Archipelago; these teachings should be evaluated against the backdrop of Dutch brutality in that geographical region and elsewhere.

All these manifestations of Tuan Guru's teachings were bent on (a) creating a new "Muslimness", effecting a social transformation – an environment that diametrically opposed the "world of the infidel (kafir)," and (b) consolidating the faith, identity, and consciousness of being Muslim in a VOC cum Protestant controlled colonial Cabo de Goede Hoop.

However, this essay begins by unpacking key terms and concepts before it comments on Tuan Guru's works, teachings, and social implications.

2. Terms and Concepts: Explanations

The issue of Identity or self-consciousness lies at the root of the notion of subjectivity. The latter-mentioned idea is used as an explanation for that which influences, informs, and biases people's judgments about truth or reality; it is the collection of the perceptions, experiences, expectations, and personal or cultural understanding of, and beliefs about, an external phenomenon, that are specific to a subject. In short: it determines how people views and behaves in the secularized world.

However, the issue of 'subjectivity' is an inherently social mode that comes about through innumerable interactions within society. As much as subjectivity is a process of individuation, it is equally a process of socialization; that is, the individual never being isolated in a self-contained environment, but endlessly engaging and interacting with the surrounding world.

Moreover, culture is a living totality of the subjectivity of any given society constantly undergoing transformation. Thus, subjectivity is both shaped by it and shapes it in turn; but it is also affected by other things like the economy, political institutions, communities, and the natural world. Consequently, Muslims develop a consciousness, because of being aware of their existence, as Muslims, this awareness, in turn, affects their thought processes, decision-making, and their attention that, eventually, publicly and privately, manifested itself as "Muslimness"; this is a process that includes subjectivity, identity, consciousness, and culture.

More significantly, the components of culture consist of attitudes, beliefs, language, customs, rituals, religion, dietary habits, functioning, importance of family, decision-making in family, arts, music, employment, and feelings regarding contact with others of the same ethnic groups, and so forth. These components are transmitted historically through three elements: symbols (such as emblems, icons, assigned meaning, verbal and non-verbal messages, and so forth), meanings (that is, interpretation of symbols meaningfully), and norms (that is, patterns of appropriate ways of communicating).

Now, cultural identity can, therefore, be defined as that part of an individual's psyche; one that identifies with his/her culture. It occurs in the process of cultural interaction among people. This identity is expectantly value-laden, and non-static as it changes when an individual from one culture is placed in, or faced with, another culture, for a significant period.

Also, cultural traits of Muslims of diverse ethnic groups may be different; but they are furthermore guided by similar principles and injunctions as prescribed by Islam.

Hence, Tuan Guru's teachings fundamentally influenced how Muslims in Dutch and British colonial Cabo de Goede Hoop experienced and comprehended their existential world. Thus, religion became a key cultural identity marker in a colonial Cabo de Goede Hoop context.

3. Tuan Guru's Works and the notion of "Cape Muslimness": The New Approach

Imam 'Abdullah completed his magnum opus in 1786 while still being a political prisoner of the Dutch at Cabo de Goede Hoop; this work consisted of, among others, a transcription of the Umm al-Barāhīn (The Demonstrative Proofs), also known as the Sanūsiyya (The Twenty Attributes of Allahor 20 Şīfats (Cabo de Goede Hoop)/or Şīfat Dua Puluh (Melayu-Indonesian world) that is a classic Ash'arite text on Muslim belief ('aqidah); a text that was accompanied by one of its commentaries, based on the theology of the Oneness and attributes of Allah and those of His Prophets.

The Sanūsiyya was authored by Muḥammad Ibn Yūsuf Ibn 'Umar Ibn Shu'ayb al-Sanūsī al-Ḥasanī al-Tilmisānī (Abū 'Abdullāh) (d.1490) and it consisted of selected Prophetic □ sayings (aḥādīth), supplications (du'as) and litanies (aḥzāh). It also contained transcriptions of selected chapters (surahs) and verses (ayahs) of Al-Qur'ān; and Islamic jurisprudence (fiqh). And finally, Tuan Guru too produced a perfect handwritten copy (mushaf) of Al-Qur'ān; and this was written in the Slave Lodge, and not on Robben Island, as generally accepted; and in addition, the manual of mystical texts and a royal genealogy were also written in Arabic and Malay after his release from Robben Island in 1791.

Of great significance are the mentioning of the early Muslim scholars and mystics by Imam 'Abdullah in his magnum corpus, namely: Al-Ghazali (1058-1111) and Muḥyiddīn Ibn 'Arabi (1165-1240). The latter, in particular, because of his influence on important scholars and mystics in the Melayu Archipelago, that complemented much of the thoughts of Imam 'Abdullah - particularly his collection of prayers for the day and the night of the week.

Thus, Imam 'Abdullah divided religious manifestations into three basic levels: folk religion (religion of this world), mosque religion (religion of the hereafter), and mystical religion (religion of the Absolute, beyond this world and the next). Hence, three corresponding goals characterise the essence of these levels, namely: power (through magic and the supernatural), salvation (through obedience), and final liberation from contingent existence in this life (through realization of God).

According to Imam Abdullah's great grandson, Imam 'Abdullah 'Abdul Rakiép in conversation with Reverend James Alexander Hewitt (1843-1910) who was an author, a South African clergyman and the Rector of Worcester, South Africa, Imam 'Abdullah:

“...instructed the Mohammedan slaves, who resorted to him for that purpose at night and by stealth, in the principles and observances of their religion, and also made several converts from among the Malabars and Malagasies. [In fact] ... the first revival of [the Islamic] religion is attributed to the arrival at the Cape about the middle of the last century [i.e 18th century] of an Arab of rank—Seid or Shariff Hassan bin-al-Louin—but more particularly, to the teachings of the first Mohammedan priest who resided at the Cape—Imam Abdullah...” (My emphasis)

Nevertheless, his life at Cabo de Goede Hoop, was premised on: (a) imprisonment (1780-1791), writing (his magnum opus referred to as the Ma'rifat and the Qur'an); (b) dissemination of God's Twenty Attributes as taught according to Ash'arism; a school of thought that allowed Muslims to know and believe what were necessary, inadmissible, and admissible regarding God (Allah) and His Messengers; and (c) on waging an inner, as opposed to an outer, physical “holy war” (jihad), against VOC brutality and oppression.

These teachings were bent on inculcating a Muslim subjectivity, identity, and consciousness, which effected a social hierarchy based on Qur'anic values, such as justice, respect for differences, and forgiveness; all of which were devoid of race and class discrimination but that were linked to public and private expressions of “Cape Muslimness”, namely: shrines (kramats - “The Holy Circle of Tombs”), talismans/or amulets (azeemats), Muslim attire (straw hat-toedang; turban and coat [badju] over a silk or cotton garment and wooden sandals with a knot [kaparrings]); rites and rituals (burials, khalifah display, and the five obligatory daily prayers); language (‘Malay’ as a lingua franca and Afrikaans-Arabic religious handwritten *kitab*s [texts]); culinary tradition (spices such as turmeric, cinnamon, ginger), and the Melayu adat, such as Javanese heroism as manifested by the draping of a “mystical” dagger by Imams in the Cape Colony, and by the Dutch's presentation of a “supernatural kris” to ‘High Priest’ Frans van Bengal, who stood-in for Imam 'Abdullah due to his infirmities, at the formation of the Malay/Javanese Artillery in 1803.

In fact, from the 18th century onwards, the cultural distinctiveness of “Cape Muslimness” - as manifest in food, dress codes, religious rituals, language, and “folk” and “religious” music, and kramats - meshed to form an authentic “imagined community” of culturally diverse Muslims in Cape Town. Images of Cape Muslims were publicly enacted and recreated in travel writing, and in colonial paintings, as the “labour aristocrats” amongst the Black underclasses of Cape Town, “exotic”, “intelligent”, “fatalistic”, “treacherous”, and so forth. Moreover, in law courts, they were portrayed as, “God-forsaken”, “rascals”; “undesirables”; “restless spirits”; “revengeful”; “evil scoundrels”, and so forth. In essence, the Dutch imperial narrative and public imagination about “Oostelingen” at Cabo de Goede Hoop, was “visually ambiguous”.

The approach of this research essay is, therefore, to highlight and espouse on the essence of the Imam ‘Abdullah’s teachings, and their concomitant radical social transformations they effected in an initially clandestine, and essentially embryonic Muslim community in colonial Cape Town, between 1791 and 1807; for, according to the High Priest, Imam Achmat van Bengal, disciple of Imam ‘Abdullah, to Judge W. W. Burton of the Supreme Court in Cape Town: “[When] Prince Abdullah came to the Cape...there was not more than 50 people in our religion.” In short: from his release from Robben Island in 1791 to his death at the age of 110 years in 1807.

Hence, by drawing on archival manuscripts and printed material, historical artefacts (such as the sword and the shield of Imam ‘Abdullah); the Arabic-Malay works of Imam ‘Abdullah’s magnum opus, and on secondary works by VOC scholars (like Nigel Worden, Kerry Ward, Robert Shell, ‘Adil Bradlow, and so forth) to expound on the teachings of Imam ‘Abdullah, my analytical and thematic but succinct focus, will be on the following constituent aspects:

- (i) the short “arrival prayer” (du’a) Imam ‘Abdullah recited on his arrival in the Cape Colony in 1780; “holy warfare” and, the accompanying symbolism of his sword and his shield and Major Kuchler’s dagger (kris) - a talisman with power - which served as the blueprint for his magnum opus consisting of over six-hundred pages;
- (ii) the doctrine of faith (imān) which occupies a cardinal role in the teachings of Ash’arism;
- (iii)43 Dorp Street[“Auwal”] Mosque and Muslim schools [madaris] — which served two purposes, namely:
 - as the axes of Islamic teaching, and the acquisition of knowledge (learning), with Umm al-Barāhīn (Twenty Ṣifāts [Attributes]) as the main text that allowed Muslims to know and believe what is necessary, inadmissible, and admissible regarding God (Allah) and His Messengers; and consequently,
 - as bulwarks against encroachment by Christianity and British imperialism (“Infidel” [kafir] rule); and finally, on
- (iv) talismans/or amulets (azeemats) and, by implication, the blessings (barakah) of sacred sites (kramats) as loci of “healing” and “protection”—for slaves against Dutch brutality, and the promises of entry into paradise and freedom, in case of execution.

In short, my analysis of Imam ‘Abdullah’s thoughts, considers: Asha’rism, the doctrine of faith, and the Twenty-Attributes, alongside the writing of talismans and the miraculous powers derived from the holy shrines. However, these thematic and discursive structures of thought were formulated by Imam ‘Abdullah against the backdrop of a certain historical context (brutal Dutch South Africa), and, therefore, addressed particular political and social issues - such as, defining Muslim relations vis-à-vis “infidel Dutch and British rule”, delineating the contours of being Muslim in an essentially Protestant British colony and displaying, publicly and privately, a sense of belonging that is defined by the multiple allegiances of Muslims to their local cultural particularity, to Batavian Rule (1803-1806), to the British colonial state (1795-1803, and 1806 onwards) and to the transnational Muslim Ummah, spurred on by being British subjects in an essentially British, Protestant Cape Colony.

4. Exposition of the Constituent Aspects of Imam Abdullah’s Teachings

4.1 The Imam’s “arrival” prayer and the symbolism of his sword and his shield.

4.1.1 The short prayer (du’a): A blueprint of Resistance for the early Muslim community at Cabo de Goede Hoop & the completion of his magnum opus (1786).

Imam ‘Abdullah, a political prisoner (“staatsgevangen”) who had conspired with the English (“bij de Engelse overgaan”) against the Dutch in colonial Melayu Archipelago, arrived at Cabo de Goede Hoop on 13 April 1780, accompanied by Kali Abdul Rauf (Supreme judge in Tidore), and Badroedien (scribe of Abdul Rauf), Noriman (secretary of Abdul Rauf and a Muslim imam), and recited a short du’a, as a God-conscious and self-effacing servant of the Almighty.

But, at the same time, as an “outsider to the land of the unbelieving Dutch”, in a sense that, Muslims, in Batavia, and elsewhere in the Archipelago, were regarded by VOC authorities, as: (i) “respected heretics”, especially by Dutch traders who visited Muslim ports; (ii) “detestable heretics”, particularly by Dutch travellers and Christian missionaries who were strongly influenced by the development of Christian theology in the Netherlands; (iii) the “natural enemy of Christians”, as they could not be trusted, even as “uncivilized fanatics”, as Islam was feared as a potential catalyst for change and a threat to the very existence of the Dutch in the region; and finally, (iv) as members of a “backward” religion, in need of Christian “teachers” and “guardians.”

Thus, Imam ‘Abdullah regarded himself as, the son of the unjustly treated (Al Hakir)/oppressed (“الظالم”) judge (Qadi) ‘Abdus-Salam, and as an outcast in the land of “infidels”, which he also regarded as: “the Land of the accursed” (“Dar al-la’nah”), a “Place of heretics” (Balad al-Kuffar), and of “Place of Sorrows” (“Balad al-Huzn”). That is, as a colonial outpost consisting of “religious renegades”, “infidels”, “dissidents”, “unorthodox religious discourses” and “apostates”, prevalent in a world characterized by VOC torment and injustice. Hence, like previous Southeast Asian political and religious exiles (such as Imam Jouddan Tappa who was executed in 1713 for planning a “conspiracy” against VOC hegemony by preaching the importance of freedom and escape to the “Fatherland) banished from VOC headquarters in Batavia to Cabo de Goede Hoop, Imam ‘Abdullah’s discourse outlined in his magnum opus, was bent the acquisition of freedom through conversion, moral transformation (an “inner jihad”), and ultimately, inversion of the world the masters made.

Thus, many years later in 1812, Chief Justice Truter wrote a letter to the British Governor of the Cape in which he confirmed that, “[the] free Javanese and some who have originally in their own country embraced the Mahomedan religion, and who, having arrived here in the principles of that faith, use their endeavours to persuade their posterity and their friends to the same belief.” In short: accept the Muslim faith and moral transformation and resist Dutch oppression.

Consequently, his “arrival prayer” constituted the blueprint of the initially clandestine, small, and emerging Muslim community in colonial Cape Town, namely:

Figure 1: Imam’s Du’a

In the Name of God, the Infinitely Good, the Ever Merciful

Oh Allah, guide us with the guidance of the Qur’an. Allow us to escape hellfire with the blessings of the Qur’an. Forgive us with the richness of the Qur’an. Increase our rank with the blessings of the Qur’an. Erase our sins with the sanctity of the Qur’an. Allow us to enter the Jannah with the intercession of the Qur’an. Forgive all those who are alive and those who have passed on with the recitation of the Qur’an. Fulfill our needs with the virtue of the Qur’an. May Allah forgive us of all the tribulations of this world and the punishment of the hereafter with the response of the Qur’an. Deliver us from the evil of this world and the evil of the hereafter by the wisdom of the Qur’an. By the example set by our Prophet, Al-Mustafa, the light of this world and the hereafter, the owner of the Criterion, may the salutations of Allah be upon Sayyid Muhammad, his family, and his companions. All praise is due to Allah. Lord of the worlds.

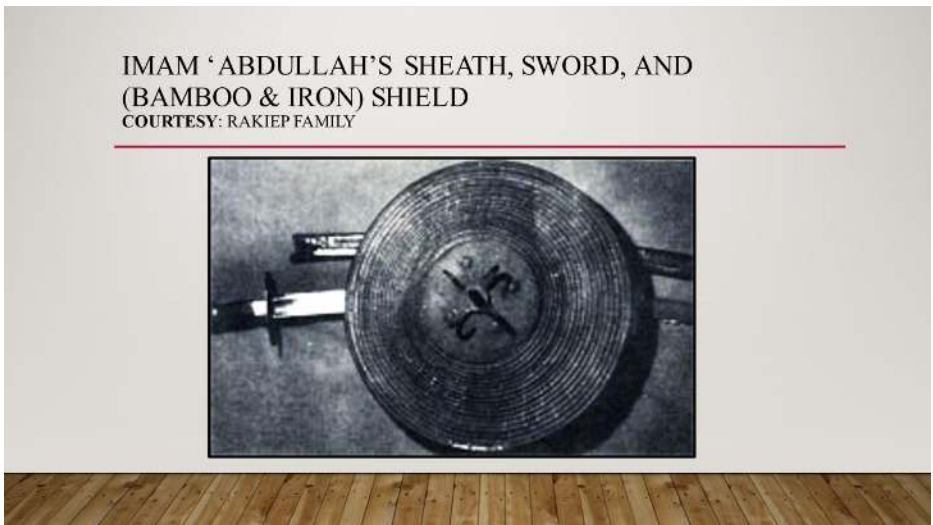

English Translation & Arabic Typesetting: Armien Cassiem (Leiden University, 2006).

Hence, the Imam’s above-mentioned prayer recited on his arrival at Cabo de Goede Hoop, constituted one of the foundation stones for the creation of his “ideal world” in the midst of “the vile existence that surrounds us”; a utopia that would counteract and transcend “the Dutch Calvinists and their God-given morals”. Thus, to him, in this utopia, Muslims should appeal to God, in order to: inter alia, “improve their status (rank) in life”; “Forgive all those who are alive and those who have passed on with the recitation of the Qur’an”; “Fulfill [their] needs with the virtues of the Qur’an”, and “deliver [themselves] from the evil of this world and the evil of the hereafter by the wisdom of the Qur’an.” In other words, Muslims should make God’s Word, the Qur’an, and not man-made laws, the foundation of their existence. Therefore, Allah, as “Lord of the Universe”, was the epicentre of creation. Thus, Muslims must ask the Almighty to, “shower peace and blessings upon the Prophet Muhammad, his family and his companions”, as they served as their exemplar in this world [of the infidel].

Consequently, Imam ‘Abdullah’s “arrival prayer” made God’s Word, the Qur’an, and not man-made laws, the foundation of their existence. Therefore, Allah, as “Lord of the Universe”, became the epicentre of creation. Hence, his “arrival prayer” was bent on re-imagining and re-articulating a utopia diametrically contradicting and contesting the Dutch world of whips, chains, patriarchy, racial, and labour hierarchies, parochialism, insularity, Protestant morality, and Western Christian civilization, that were all bent on maintenance of VOC hegemony.

4.1.2 “Holy warfare”, the symbolism of Imam ‘Abdullah’s sword and the shield and Major Kuchler’s dagger (kris) - a talisman with power.

Figure 2: The Imam’s Sheath, Sword, and Shield

Since the Imam's release from Robben Island in 1791, his "holy warfare" took the form of an "Inner jihad" bent on the creation of a new, decolonized Muslim self, identity, and consciousness; one that would endorse an Islamic way of life that embraced Melayu Archipelago/Malay-Indonesian customs (adat). And one that was not only diametrically opposed the "world made by the Dutch "infidels" but also resisted the encroachment of Occidental cultural imperialism.

His sword and shield, used in the "outer jihad" against VOC hegemony, and his acceptance of the Javanese kris in 1803 at the hands of the Batavian "infidels", were extensions of his "holy warfare;" in other words, the Imam's sword symbolised discernment between truth and falsehood, in the name of Divine Justice, as per Divine Volition. Allah's name, which was engraved on the plate of handle of the sword, symbolised the struggle against Dutch "Infidel" rule, as willed by God; his sheath symbolised the Divine Will that "encased" Divine Justice and Allah's name. While his bamboo and iron shield symbolised valour and self-defence as well as protection in struggle, the Javanese dagger (kris) symbolised the infusion of bravery, heroism, pride, social status, and social solidarity that transcended ethnicity.

4.2 The Doctrine of Faith (Imān): The heart of Ash'arism

4.2.1 Ashar'ri Theology of Imam 'Abdullah and Muslims under slavery

As a follower of Ash'ari theology, Imam 'Abdullah was more likely to have taught Muslims at Cabo de Goede Hoop that, slavery was non-permanent, changeable, and "accidental", as it manifested because of historical error. In God's eyes, slavery was not an "objective reality", as He could not Will into existence "injustice". But their reasoning and its concomitant senses, therefore, could not fully comprehend the unique nature and attributes of God. They could, however, through prayer, appeal to an all-Powerful God to will righteousness into historical manifestation, as their freedom was, ultimately, unable to effect real historical change. They could only decide between God's given possibilities which were, therefore, divinely ordained.

In short: the fate of humanity is Willed by God, and therefore, only He can change it. Appealing to the "earthly" Dutch authority will be less effective. Humanity depends on God, and His Infinite Mercy to will justice and equity into existence. Hence, to Muslims in colonial Cape, the final abolition of slavery in 1838 throughout the British Empire, did not depend on the decree of the British monarchy, as such. On the contrary, it depended on God's Mercy to Will righteousness into existence that favoured the enslaved. However, Britain was still held responsible for the official abolition of slavery in 1838 although God willed it into existence, for She [Britain] passed the Act officially abolishing slavery, and was, therefore, responsible for it, because She has "acquired" it. For that, the Muslim 'High Priest', Imam Achmat of Bengal, on behalf of the Muslim community in Cabo de Goede Hoop, expressed their gratitude to the Governor of the Cape Colony, His Excellency, Sir Bengamin D'Urban, K.G.B., Governor and Commander-in-chief of His Majesty's Colony of the Cape of Good Hope. By offering prayers to the British monarch for its abolition of slavery, Muslims have, in essence, expressed their gratitude to God and have praised Him for mercifully willing the death of slavery throughout the British Empire in 1838.

4.2.2 Modes of Faith and the Imam ‘Abdullah’s inner “holy war” (jihad) against Dutch Brutality.

To Imam ‘Abdullah, Muslims should be in the world but not of the world. Thus, in his magnum opus, he quotes the following saying by the Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ: “The world is a prison for the believers and heaven to the unbelievers”. Hence, Muslims were further urged to, “Recite Allah hu Akbar (God is Great) on yourself, your religion, your wealth and on the people and their religions, indefinitely”, in a place Imam ‘Abdullah regarded as, “an accursed place of sorrows and oppression” ruled by “infidels.” Hence, according to Imam ‘Abdullah, faith as the epicentre of religion should be manifested among Muslims at Cabo de Goede Hoop, through various modes, namely: “Invocation”, “charity”, “righteousness”, “sincerity”, “modesty” and “humility”, and, therefore, serve as the hallmarks of their decolonialized slave-selves.

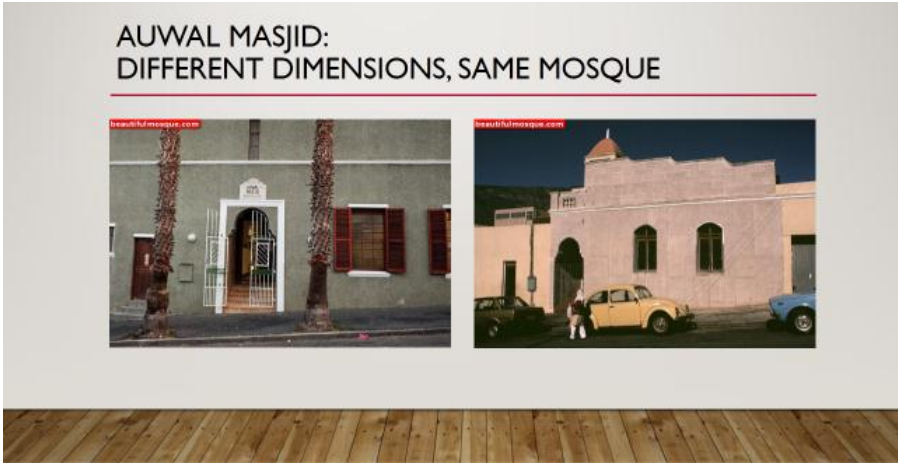

4.2.3 Dorp Street (“Auwal”) Mosque and Muslim schools [madaris], and the Umm al-Barāhīn

The Twenty Attributes (Ṣifāts), which were contained in Umm al-Barahin and that were taught by Imam ‘Abdullah and his successor priests, impacted immensely on the Muslim community that resided in British Cape colony. Knowledge of the Twenty Attributes of Allah and all those principles connected with Divinity (Ulūhiyyah) allowed Muslims to know and believe what were necessary, inadmissible, and admissible vis-a-vis Allah and His Messengers within their oppressed environment.

Moreover, Imam ‘Abdullah taught Muslims that the construction of a mosque, as a “centre for acquiring and propagating knowledge”, was related to the virtues of a “martyr’s death”; and, together with knowledge of the Attributes, it facilitated the display of stubborn resistance to the Christian Gospel of the Trinity and its ethnocentrism premised on the belief of non-Christians being “Godless heathens associated with Satan.” Thus, protecting and defending the cultural identity and Muslim consciousness (subjectivity) of the Muslims against the trust and spread of the Christian Gospel.

And finally, self-funded mosques and Muslim schools, as physical manifestations of God’s Will, were constructed and geared to social transformation, social gathering, and prayers. Therefore, mosque attendance, being accepted by the theologians, and mixing with faithful Muslims required transfiguration: that the values and character of the Muslim had to be a transposal of those prevailing in the slave city of colonial Cape Town (such as “drunkenness” and “criminality”), and inculcating the notion that, “a slave cannot be a Mahometan,” as real freedom lies with God, and His emancipation of the slave’s soul at death.

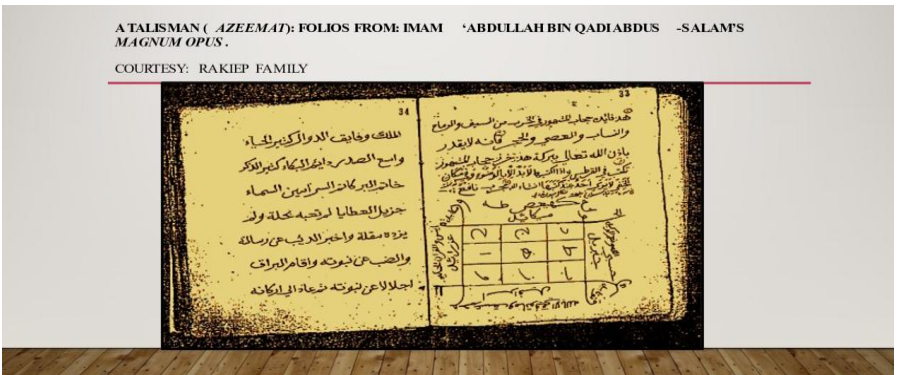

Figure 3 :

4.2.4 Talismans/or Amulets (Azeemats) and, by implication, the blessings (barakah) of kramats as sites of healing and protection.

Imam ‘Abdullah, besides penning the Qurán from memory, also wrote from memory, in his magnum opus, religious treatise—commonly, but erroneously, referred to as, Ma‘rifat al-Islam wa al-Imani (Manifestations of Islam and faith); it is a Compendium that contained, among others, Sufi texts (Arabic prayers and talismans) for protection and defense in a hostile African world. For example, there are azeemats (talismans) for: “...anything harmful in the body”; “...to strengthen memory”; “...for [the] merchant to be successful in business”; “...to be written on a piece of bread [during the outbreak of an] epidemic”; “...to be written on a ring [in order] ...to protect against ill-treatment or injustices on earth,” and to “... to be worn and written at night during the hymning of the jinn [in order] to prevent quarrels or controversies.”

Figure 4: Azeemat

Translation

This is a famous protection in war, against swords, spears, sticks and stones; “[The latter mention weapons] will not have any effect on you, with the permission of Allah and His blessings. You must write it on paper, in a private place, [after having performed] ablution (wudu). [This ‘azeemat’] has been proven [to be effective].

However, it is important to bear in mind that, unlike Imam ‘Abdullah, the “saintly powers” and “miracles” of Shaykh Yusūf al-Maqassārī, were extolled by the tales derived from the textual tradition of South Sulawesi. Thus, unlike Imam ‘Abdullah’s grave site in South Africa’s Cape Town, Shaykh Yusūf’s multiple shrines, across the Indian Ocean world from South Africa’s Makassar to Sulawesi’s Makassar, were visited for their reputed sacred potency due to the mystical and miraculous powers (karāmāt) possessed by Shaykh Yusūf. Hence, ‘blessing’ (barakah) remained magical.

Figure 5: Kramat Interior

Consequently, Imam ‘Abdullah’s magnum opus, unlike Shaykh Yusūf’s metaphysical and religious treatises, includes a selection of talismans (azeemats) to be used in order to obtain, amongst others, invulnerability on the battlefield. The “miraculous” powers of the talismans and the mystical powers or karāmāt obtained from Shaykh Yusūf’s shrine, therefore fulfilled the same function. Therefore, it was at Shaykh Yusūf’s shrine, and not at Imam ‘Abdullah’s grave that, “...people came from far away from the Cape of Good Hope to visit that place [the shrine of Shaykh Yusūf] ... [as they have] narrated from their ancestors that they have seen many extraordinary deeds [being performed by] ...a Muslim scholar ...from Java, by the name of Shaikh Yusuf ...” Thus, “more than 500 bottles of lavender water were found standing in the corner of his shrine” used to cure “many people suffering from epilepsy and malaria.” Hence, Shaykh Yusuf’s grave site became “a place of religious devotions, a pilgrimage site and a burial ground”.

Henceforth, part of Imam ‘Abdullah’s teachings included the notion of supplications and amulets as containing magical elements but ‘Islamic’ in character. Kramats, as sites of healing and protection against the African landscape and Dutch brutality, therefore, became linked to amulets and became an inevitable part of the Muslim tradition. Thus, the talisman and by implication, the blessings (barakah) of the sacred sites (kramats), promised, healing and protection to the slave against Dutch brutality and the guarantee of freedom by entering into paradise in the case of being executed.

By way of the talisman, the deserter meshed temporal space and time with the transcendent world of the Prophets and Messengers, the Archangel Gabriel, and Celestial blessings, as Imam ‘Abdullah believed that the Almighty wills what His nature is, and therefore, being “Most Merciful” and “Most Compassionate” outstrip His sense of justice.

Hence, the talisman was bent on: (i) receiving protection from Prophets, Caliphs and the Archangel of God (Allah), in order to guide the hearing, the listening and the speech of the believing slave, vis-à-vis the unknown, harsh African landscape made up of plateaus, mountains, ridges, and basins with great rivers and depressions in-between, and dangerous coastal areas with its narrow lowlands and accompanying VOC brutality; and on (ii) displaying “exemplary conduct” that was at once sacred and pious, in order to facilitate entry into heaven in the case of death.

In essence, the talisman, symbolized the meshing of the human body, divine consecration, cruelty, the African landscape, and the slave-self, which in one sense, facilitated the slaves’ desire for desertion en mass and their entry into paradise, in case of death. Through trialing eastern political and religious exiles and slaves for indulging in the supernatural in order to effect changes to the political status quo, VOC authorities were bent on preserving order, promoting “morality” (Christian ethics) and meting out “justice”, in the name of Dutch hegemony, Protestant Christianity, and Western civilization.

Interestingly, like their counterparts in the West Indies, Whites in the Cape Colony, had no conception of the actual relations between religion and magic in slave belief. This, coupled with a general distrust of religious beliefs in which religion and popular magic were not as separated as they became in the Christian Church of eighteenth-century “Enlightenment”, fostered many white colonists to see “Malay magic” as a potentially “subversive” slave belief system. Thus, its employment as a tool of resistance against VOC hegemony, merely aggravated matters, and hence was much dreaded by VOC authorities in Dutch-controlled areas in the Far East and at Cabo de Goede Hoop.

Consequently, like in Haiti, any person caught possessing the trappings of the supernatural, be that Voodoo or “Malay magic”, was imprisoned, tortured, and executed. For example: a slavin, Macotta van Bengalen, was whipped and banished from Batavia to Mauritius for ten years because she carried a tooverbriefje—an amulet inscribed with Arabic characters. Hence, VOC authorities viewed Muslim amulets as, “a piece of paper inscribed with strange characters, [that was] probably a sentence from the Koran.”

Accordingly, the practice of “pretended magical arts, and supernatural charms and enchantments”, was prevalent, although “not prominently, among Muslim Priests in 19th-century British colonial Cape Town”. Compiling a selection of amulets in his magnus opus, Imam ‘Abdullah made the supernatural an integral part of exoteric Islam.

Subsequently, kramats, as sites of healing and protection against the African landscape and Dutch brutality, became linked to the selection of amulets in his magnus opus. This nexus constituted an essential part of the Muslim tradition at Cabo de Goede Hoop, and remained as such, virtually unquestioned until way into twentieth-century South Africa.

5. Summary: The Influence of the Teachings of Imam ‘Abdullah

5.1 Imam ‘Abdullah bin Qadi ‘Abdus-Salam’s Teachings

The Imam’s teachings are found in: his magnus opus (Ash’arism, Doctrine of Faith; the Twenty Attributes of God; the selection of Qur’anic verses, supplications, sayings (aḥādīth) of the Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ, and talismans/amulets; and by implication, the blessings (barakah) of sacred sites (kramats) as loci of “healing” and “protection”); the symbolism of his sword (discernment and Divine Justice) and his shield (self-defence and valour), and the Javanese dagger (heroism, intrepidity, pride, etc).

Its teachings, therefore, consist of the following:

- Muslims should make God’s Word, the Qur’an, and not man-made laws, the foundation of their existence, and make Prophet Muhammad ﷺ, his family and his companions”, their exemplar in the world of the “infidel”.
- God, as Necessity (al-Wujūb), is Oneness (al-Wahdāniyyah), Omnipotent and All-powerful, as His Non-existence and Partnership cannot be conceived intellectually.
- He wills good and not evil. Injustice (for example, slavery) demonstrates human error.
- Humankind possesses free will only to the extent that they decide between possibilities willed by God. All human acts are, therefore, willed by God but man is responsible for those acts as he has internalized and “acquired” them. In other words, God knows things in advance. He knows what humankind will choose. Hence, predestination. But it is humankind who makes the choices (free will). Thus, humanity depends on God, and His Infinite Mercy to will justice and equity into existence.
- The Muslim’s ultimate destination is the hereafter, as this world is only an “accidental” stepping-stone for the next; that is, being in the world but not necessarily of the world.
- Faith is the heart of religion and expresses itself through various modes, while construction of a self-funded mosque constitutes the centre of the Muslim community around which everything revolves and acts as a “centre for acquiring and propagating knowledge”, which can be equated with the virtues of a “martyr’s death”.
- Supplications and amulets contain magical elements which are ‘Islamic’ in character, and therefore, constituted an integral part of the Muslim faith.

- And finally, cultural weapons, like the Javanese dagger (kris), the sword and the shield, symbolise warfare, discernment of Truth and falsehood, defence, rank, status, and character, respectively.

5.2 The Imam's Teachings: Their influence on the Cape Muslim community.

- The Imam's "arrival prayer" allowed Muslims to wage "holy warfare" through an "inner jihad" which gave them the leeway to re-imagine and re-articulate their ideal world and create a new, decolonized Muslim self, identity and consciousness that endorsed an Islamic way of life and embraced Melayu customs (adat), that diametrically contradicted and contested the maintenance of VOC hegemony - that is, a world characterised by whips, chains, patriarchy, racial and labour hierarchies, parochialism, insularity, Protestant morality, and Western Christian civilization.
- Muslims came to believe that the Almighty wills what His nature is, and therefore, being "Most Merciful" and "Most Compassionate" outstripped His sense of justice.
- "The God of Islam" was deemed Sovereign and All-Powerful. Thus, Muslim ultimately regarded their religion and faith in Him, as superior to "infidel" Dutch rule.
- Thus, despite their hardships suffered under the yoke of slavery and occidental brutality, Muslims at Cabo de Goede Hoop firmly believed that God knew who were responsible for enslavement as opposed to implementing justice. He also knew when slavery will end. Therefore, Muslims displayed faith in God because it was impossible for Him to will injustice. Being all-Merciful, He willed Justice, that led to the eventual abolition of slavery in 1838.
- Slaves were freed or placed on the road to freedom. For slavery was an oppressive evil that was not a by-product of God's Volition. Thus, Muslims believed that real freedom and the emancipation of the slave's soul at death laid with God.
- The doctrine of faith (imān) gave rise to the following core values amongst the Muslim faithful and it became the hallmarks of a decolonized slave-self, namely: "invocation", "charity", "righteousness", "sincerity", "modesty" and "humility".
- The Umm al-Barāhīn that taught Twenty Ṣifāts [Attributes]) assisted the Muslim novice with correct reasoning vis-a-vis what is necessary, inadmissible, and admissible, and became the standard text of the Muslim schools (Madrasas) attached to mosques in colonial Cape Town. It offered a critique of the Christian Doctrine of the Trinity, in a sense that, it furnished Muslims, the enslaved and the freed, with a rational unitary comprehension of the Almighty, namely, that God's Essence is Oneness which abrogates the possibility of (any form of) Partnership. Therefore, the Christian concept of "God the Father, God, the Son, and the God, Holy Spirit", became a conceivable impossibility for Muslims.
- Thus, mosques and Muslim schools (madaris) became bulwarks against the possible encroachment by Christianity and British cultural imperialism upon Muslim cultural and religious spaces - that is, as barricades against relentless book and print-driven civilizing colonialism bent on inscribing in the "treacherous Oriental Other" the precepts of an essentially Protestant, Western modernity by implanting in their minds the dreams of a “rational”, Christian community. In essence, the remaking of “Malays” in European image verbally, by way of sermons, classroom lessons, informal talks, and public lectures; and by way of the print-word: the Bible, newspapers, books, periodicals, memorials, and so forth.

Therefore, the construction and maintenance of the Muslim religious institutions became community and never state-funded. Also, mosques, as they became a barrier against immoralism, they, therefore, had an transforming function; one which counteracted the Christian evangelists’ need for slave conversion to Christianity in order to develop “better” morals by living a “decent” and “civilized” life. But even though converted, he/she remained subordinated to white rule and this underscored that the political philosophy of missionaries continued to be a conservative form of nineteenth-century liberalism; it was one in which “non-whites” were defended from the injustices of colonial rule but without questioning it.

- Moreover, religious inscriptions became regarded as talismanic, to some extent, because of the perceived protective value of words such as “Allāh”. Hence, Muslims believed that they were safeguarded against incipient dangers and menaces posed by inevitable external uncertainty - protection that came from Prophets, Caliphs, and God’s Archangel in order to guide the hearing, the listening, and the speech of the believing slave. Muslims now deemed that kramats, as sites of healing and protection against the African landscape and Dutch brutality, were linked to amulets and were an inevitable part of the faith of Islam.
- And lastly, cultural weapons, like the Javanese dagger, became part of religious attire of the Muslim ‘High priests’ that is, those who were spiritually and morally elevated, and, therefore, symbolized social rank, heroism, valour and righteous character.

6. Conclusion

Incarceration for eleven years; compilation of a voluminous religious discourse and treatise; establishment of mosques and Muslim schools; and inculcation and overcoming the in-born “worship of the world” (that is, an inner “Holy struggle”): during the period 1780 to 1807, these essentially characterized the life of Imam ‘Abdullah bin Qadi Abdus-Salam while residing in Cabo de Goede Hoop or what became known as colonial Cape Town.

The Imam’s universal, essentially Asha’ari-inspired teachings were premised on: (i) a short “arrival prayer” (1780); (ii) “holy warfare”, the symbolism of his sword and the shield, and Major Kuchler’s dagger (kris) as a talisman with power; (iii) the doctrine of faith (imān) that gave rise to the core values of the Muslim faithful at Cabo de Goede Hoop, and became the hallmarks of a decolonialized slave-self, namely: “invocation”, “charity”, “righteousness”, “sincerity”, “modesty” and “humility”; (iv) the Umm al-Barāhīn that taught the Twenty Ṣifāts that assisted Muslim novices with correct reasoning vis-a-vis what is necessary, inadmissible and admissible, and became the standard text of the Muslim schools attached to mosques in colonial Cape Town, and finally, (v) talismans/or amulets (azeemats), and shrines (kramats) as sites of healing and protection.

Tuan Guru's teachings principally revolved around God's Mercy to will Justice. Muslims had to turn to God's power in the end; a power that can also cause suffering but does not wish suffering. Thus, Muslims never saw themselves as slaves of the Dutch, but as slaves of God-their bodies were enslaved, but not their souls.

Gradually, an underlying Islamic discourse of freedom constituted the vortex and texture of the narrative of Muslim Free Blacks during early nineteenth-century Batavian (1803-1806) and British colonial rule (1806-), based on Qur'anic injunctions, Imam 'Abdullah's magnum opus and on their understanding of British law vis-à-vis slavery, slave purchases and slave emancipation; and publicly articulated in the "Evidence of "Malay" 'High Priests', Imam Achmat van Bengal and Imaum Muding" submitted to the Commissioner of Enquiry in 1826.

And finally, the Imam's teachings and the emerging underlying Muslim discourse of freedom were all geared to resistance of Dutch oppression and brutality, Western colonial Christianity, and bent on inculcating a Muslim self, identity, and consciousness; together these effected a social hierarchy based not on class-and-race-based values, but on Qur'anic values, such as justice, respect for differences, forgiveness; and these, in turn, were linked to kramats, azeemats, prophetic statements, and Melayu Archipelago adat, such as Javanese heroism and valour.

7. Bibliography: A Select List

- Allen, Amy. 2002. "Power, Subjectivity, and Agency: Between Arendt and Foucault". In International Journal of Philosophical Studies. 10(2): 131–149.
- Barenclouw, P.L. 1864. "Aanteekening van het Gepasserde te Kartasoera door den Luitenant Nicholaas Wiltvang en de Overige Vaandrigs." In Bijdragen tot de Taal-, Land en Volkenkunde. 11(1):124-139.
- Backhouse, J. 1844. A Narrative of a visit to the Mauritius and South Africa. London: New York: Hamilton, Adams & Co., Paternoster Row, MDCCCXLIV.
- Brain, J.B. (Ed.) 1988. The Cape Diary of Bishop Patrick Raymond Griffith for the years 1837 to 1839. Durban: Southern African Catholic Bishop's Conference.
- Brown, Vincent. 2003. "Spiritual Terror and Sacred Authority in Jamaican Slave Society." In Slavery & Abolition. 24(1): 24-53.
- Comaroff, John & Jean. 1991. Of Revelation and Revolution: Christianity, Colonialism and Consciousness in South Africa. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. Vol. I.
- Davids, Achmat. 2011. The Afrikaans of the Cape Muslims: From 1815 to 1915 (Eds. Hein Willemsse & Suleman E. Dangor). Pretoria: Pretoria Book House.
- Davids, Achmat. 1994. "Alternative Education: Tuan Guru and the Formation of the Cape Muslim Community." In Pages from Cape Muslim History (Eds. Yusuf da Costa & Achmat Davids). Pietermaritzburg: Shuter and Shooter. pp. 47-56.
- Davids, Achmat. 1995. "Imams and Conflict Resolution Practices Among Cape Muslims in

- the Nineteenth century.” In Kronos: Journal of Cape History. 22: 54-72, November.
- Dawīlah al-Edrūs, S.M. 1993. The Role of Kitab Jawi in the Development of Islamic Thought in the Malay Archipelago with special Reference to Umm al-Barahin and the Writings on the Twenty Attributes. Unpublished Ph. D thesis, University of Edinburgh.
- de Haan, Frederik. 1907. Dagh-Register gehouden int Casteel Batavia vant passerende daer ter plaetse als over geheel Nederlandts India Anno 1678. ‘s Gravenhage: Martinus Nijhoff.
- de Kock, Leon. 2002. Civilizing Barbarians: Missionary narrative and African textual response in nineteenth-century South Africa. Johannesburg: Witwatersrand University Press.
- Dhofier, Zamakhsyari. 1980. The Pesantren Tradition: A study of the role of the Kyai in the maintenance of the traditional ideology of Islam. Unpublished PhD Thesis, Australian National University.
- Effendi, Omar L. 1991. *A Travelogue of My Journey to the Cape of Good Hope*_(Tr. Yusuf Z. Kavarci). Cape Town: Al-Khaleel Publications.
- Elphick, Richard. 2012. The Equality of Believers: Protestant Missionaries and the racial politics of South Africa. Scottsville; University of Kwazulu-Natal Press.
- Haasbroek, L.C.S. 1955. Die Sending onder die Mohammedane in Kaapstad en Omgewing. Unpublished MA Dissertation, University of Stellenbosch.
- Hendricks, Sieraj. 2005. Taşawwuf (Şūfism): Its role and impact on the culture of Cape Islam Unpublished MA Thesis, University of South Africa.
- Jardine, Alexander J. 1827. A Fragrant of Church History at the Cape of Good Hope. Heeregracht, Cape Town: W. Bride Kirk.
- Kemper, Simon C. 2018. “The White heron Called by the Muezzin: Shrines, Sufis and war lords in early modern Java.” In Challenging Cosmopolitanism: Coercion, mobility, and displacement in Islamic Asia. (Eds. J. Gedacht and R. M. Feener). Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press.
- McKenzie, Kirsten. 1993. The Making of an English Slave-owner Samuel Eusebius Hudson at the Cape of Good Hoop 1796-1807. Rondebosch: UCT Press.
- Moodie, John Wedderburn Dunbar. 1835. Ten Years in South Africa: including a particular description of the wild sports of that country. London: Richard Bentley. Vol. II.
- Morton, Shafiq. 2018. From the Spice Islands to Cape Town: The life and times of Tuan Guru. Cape Town: National Awqaf Foundations of South Africa.
- Nasr, Sayyed H. 2010. Ideals and Realities of Islam. Cambridge: The Islamic text Society.
- Pelras, Christian. 1985. “Religion, Tradition and the dynamics of Islamization in South Sula wesi.” In Archipel, 29: 147-148 [133-154].
- Quinn, George. 2018. *Bandit Saints of Java: How Java’s eccentric saints are challenging fundamentalists Islam in modern Indonesia*_. Burrough on the Hill, UK: Monsoon Books. 2nd Ed.

- Raboteau, Albert J. 1978. Slave Religion: The 'Invisible Institution' in the Antebellum South. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Raffles, Thomas S. 1817. History of Java. London: Black, Parbury & Allen. Vol. II.
- Rafudeen, Auwais. 2004. The Compendium of Tuan Guru: A translation and contextualization (A Research File). Bellville: Dept. of Foreign Language, UWC, 16 December.
- Rafudeen, Auwais. 2005. "A Parallel Mode of Being: The Sanusiya & Intellectual subversion in Cape Town, Part I." In Journal for the Study of Religion.18(2): 23-38.
- Rafudeen, Auwais. 2005. "A Parallel Mode of Being: The Sanusiya & Intellectual subversion in Cape Town, Part II." In Journal for the Study of Religion.18(1): 77-95.
- Rafudeen, Auwais. 2006. "Ritual and Political Critique: Tuan Guru's subversive pietism." In Journal for Islamic Studies.26: 92-112.
- Salie, Achmat. 2020. "Tuan Guru Abdullah bin Qadi Abdus Salaam (1712-1807): A Malay Hero at Cape Town." In Colonialism in the Malay Archipelago: Civilizational encounters. (Eds. Osman Bakar, A.A.M. Merican and Wan Ali Wan Mamat). Kuala Lumpur: ISTAC-IIUM Publications.
- Scherzer, Karl Ritter von. 1861. Narrative of the Circumnavigation of the Globe by the Austrian Frigate Novara, commodore B. von Wullerstorf-Urbair, undertaken by order of the Imperial government, in the Years 1857, 1858 and 1859, under the immediate auspices of...the Archduke Ferdinand Maximilian. London: Saunders, Otley and Company.
- Schribner, R.W. & K. Thomas. 1971. Religion and the Decline of Magic: Studies in popular beliefs in sixteenth-and seventeenth-century England. London: Weidenfeld & Nicholson.
- Schroöder, R. 2007. Cults: Secrets, sects and radical religions. Dubai: Calton Books.
- Skeat W.W. 1900. Malay Magic being an introduction to the folklore and popular religion of the Malay peninsula. New York: Macmillan & Co. Ltd.
- Suttles, W.C. 1971. "African religious survivals as factors in American slave revolts." In Journal of Negro History. LVI (2): 97-104.
- van Bruinessen, Martin. 1990. "Kitab Kuning: Books in Arabic Script used in the Pesantren Milieu. In Bijdragen tot de Taal-, Land- en Volkenkunde.146: 226-269.
- Winstedt, R. 1951. The Malay Magician: Being shaman, Saiva and Sufi. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul.

CHAPTER NINE

Tuan Guru's Tangible Contributions: His relevance in the 21st Century

Luqman Rakiep and Muttaqin Rakiep

- بِسْمِ اللّٰهِ الرَّحْمٰنِ الرَّحِیْمِ

In the name of Allah, the Entirely Merciful, the especially Merciful.

Praise be to Allah, the Lord of the worlds; and may His blessings and peace be upon our Prophet Muhammad and upon all his family and companions

*And I did not create the jinn and mankind except to worship Me.*¹

Abstract

Though several slaves and political prisoners from the Melayu Archipelago were exiled at the Cape before Imam 'Abdullah ibn Qadi 'Abdus Salam aka Tuan Guru was brought as a prisoner, it was he who helped to shape the early Cape Muslim community. For this reason, Tuan Guru has been referred to as the community/s founding father. Being from Tuan Guru direct lineage, we showed in this chapter to what degree Tuan Guru made tangible contribution and we argue why he remains relevant for the Cape Muslim community as well as their co-religionists in other parts of the country and those in and beyond present-day Indonesia's Makassar. The chapter thus, in the light of the Qur'an, briefly reflects on Tuan Guru's imprisonment and evaluate his legacy that involved: (a) writing the Qur'an from memory; (b) authoring of religious - theological and juridical - texts (which are still extant); and (c) the establishment of the first madrasah and masjid respectively. In addition to these tangible contributions, the focus turns to his teachings, values, life-giving lessons, and insights; these are drawn from his Compendium.

Keywords: Tuan Guru, Tangible Contributions, Compendium, Madrasa, Masjid, Teachings, Cabo de Goede Hoop.

1. Introduction: Allah's Will

Throughout the world and specifically the developing countries, the effects of the colonialism are still felt to this day, the 21st century, by those exploited, displaced, and dispossessed of resources, wealth, self-determination, and dignity. History bears testimony that the colonial conquest of subjugation and enslavement, of divide and rule was a brutal system, purpose-driven by the motive of acquisition of power, and economic exploitation and dominance.

In the process of realising this objective, the colonialists annihilated other systems of belief, culture, and socio-economic structures to the detriment of its people. When confronted in South-East Asia, and Indonesia in particular, with Islam and opposition, the colonial powers showed no mercy or compassion to human life and other civilisations with their unjust destructive ideology, policies, and all-consuming aggression.

*They want to extinguish the light of Allah with their mouths, but Allah refuses except to perfect His light, although the disbelievers dislike it.*²

Imam 'Abdullah bin Qadi Abdus-Salam (d.1807) also known as Tuan Guru (Esteemed Teacher), was one of the Archipelago's (present-day Indonesia) son, who steadfastly refused to bend to this brutal system and valiantly opposed this soul-destroying subjugation and oppression of his people by the Dutch and the economic hegemonic elite of the Vereenigde Oos-Indische Companje (VOC).

For this, Tuan Guru earned their wrath and was exiled to the furthestmost outpost of Dutch colonial rule at the southernmost tip of Africa - the Cape of Good Hope (present-day South Africa). Tuan Guru's activity, during his incarceration at Robben Island (9 km from mainland Cape of Good Hope [present-day Greater Cape Town]), and the subsequent leading role he played, upon being released, in providing hope to the oppressed and displaced, led to the consolidation and spread of Islam at the Cape.

Our very existence, today, as a well-established Greater Cape Town Muslim community and throughout South Africa (and beyond), is to a large extent a manifestation of Tuan Guru's iconic contribution to human upliftment and development in the furtherance of Islam, through his unwavering belief in Allah, most High, and emulation of His beloved Prophet Muhammad ﷺ. Though, a very underappreciated and understudied figure in the annals of history, his leadership, vision, transformative action, writings, and subsequent legacy truly earned him the honour to be regarded as 'the father of institutionalised Islam at the Cape'.

This essay will, in the light of the Qur'an, briefly reflect on Tuan Guru's imprisonment and evaluate his legacy that involved: (a) writing the Qur'an from memory; (b) authoring of religious - theological and juridical - texts (which are still extant); and (c) the establishment of the first madrasah and masjid. In addition to these tangible contributions, the focus turns to Tuan Guru's teachings, his deep insights, his healthy values, and his life-giving lessons from which contemporary communities and individuals in South Africa, Indonesia and elsewhere may still derive their inspiration and guidance.

2. Background: Hope

Tuan Guru hailed from Tidore, a small island in Maluku Utara (Northern Maluku) – Jaza'ir al-Muluk (the islands of kings), situated in the eastern part of Indonesia. The island was an established sovereignty with the sultan as head of state. Apart from Tidore, the sultan's reign stretched from Halmahera, in the north, and as far as Irian Jaya or Papua to the east. Islam was the dominant religion and was already deeply rooted within the society guided by many Muslim scholars. According to European historians, Islam entered this part of the eastern Melayu Archipelago during the late fifteenth or sixteenth centuries with the reversion of Sultan Ciri Leliatu alias Jamaluddin. Irham Rosyidi, however, argues that Islam already entered Tidore at an earlier date under Sultan Nuruddin (1334-1372).³

Tuan Guru was born into a Javanese family that traced its familial roots back to the Sultanate of Cirebon and Sharif Hidayatullah, who was the progenitor of Islam in the Archipelago. Tuan Guru's family was deeply and closely connected to the Sultanate of Tidore. Tidore, like the other Sultanates in the region, had an established form of government, with the sultan being advised by a council of ministers. Tuan Guru's family members formed part of this council and it is within this council that some of them played a major role as religious advisors, the sultan's scribes (sekretariat) and in other capacities.

'Abdus-Salam, Tuan Guru's father, was a religious scholar who became a Qadi (judge). During the Tidorese struggle against colonialism, Qadi 'Abdus-Salam was forced to flee to the neighbouring island Halmahera. From its jungles, he continued to counter and resist the Dutch colonialists. Qadi 'Abdus-Salam's final resting place was at the Cape of Patani in Halmahera⁴. From this, it may be gathered that Tuan Guru came from a family that was steeped in knowledge of Islam, informed about the government's affairs and structures, and serving the people's needs and resisting colonialism.

When the colonialists discovered these spice Islands, they found a civilisation with a structured governmental system, grounded in believe in Allah. In their devious manoeuvrings of divide and rule, the colonialists gained control of these islands monopolizing the spice trade and breaking the system. It was during this struggle to control the spice Islands that Tuan Guru was captured at a bay of Tidore, Cobo. Thereafter, he was sent into exile via Batavia and then banished to the Cabo de Goede Hoop.⁵ Upon Tuan Guru's arrival on the 6th of April 1780, he was immediately transferred to Robben Island together with Noro Iman, Badruddin and Kali (Qadi) Abderouf.⁶

The landscape that he encountered was totally foreign to the one that he was so brutally wrenched from. In his writings, Tuan Guru, referred to the Cape as: Balad al-Kuffar (land of disbelievers); Dar al-La'nah (abode of accursedness); Balad al-Gharib (land of strangeness) and Makan al-Huzn (a place of sorrow). The Cape was a place where only Christianity, as institutionalised and practised by the Dutch Reformed Church (DRC), could be practised; it was a place of accursedness and sadness where people were enslaved, dehumanised, and exploited, and punished at the dictates and whim of the colonial master. It was a place where humans were subjected to various forms of punishments as stated by Salie⁷:

Breaking on the wheel; pinching with glowing tongs; burning; beheadings; hanging; quartering; torture; chopping-off of hand; scorching; branding; bondage in chains and exhibiting under gallows with a noose around the neck.

Though it was, indeed, a strange (isolated and unfamiliar) place for Tuan Guru, it was one where he ultimately played a pivotal role; he selflessly contributed towards its transformation. The actions and teachings of Tuan Guru testify that his description of the Cape in these negative terms was not that of a person idly lamenting his/her lot; broken by his/her environment; overpowered and rendered hopeless by exile and life's challenges. It was, however, an expression of a discerning realisation and characterisation of the distinctive nature of a reality that needed to be changed. This aforesaid assertion is made in the light of Tuan Guru usually concluding a treatise with one of these descriptions as if he was contextualising the situation in which it was written and on which he wanted it to have effect.

Also, towards the conclusion of the earliest text that he transcribed, he introduced himself as the writer, "... strange/foreign in the land of the disbelievers living at the Cape ...⁸ ...غريبا في بلد الكفار الكاف يسكنه". As such, whilst writing during early incarceration and as 'foreign in the land, Tuan Guru used the word living (يسكن) and not imprisoned (يسجن) at the Cape. From this, it becomes obvious that he has already consciously adopted it as his place of living. Tuan Guru realised his purpose in life and imbued by a sense of destiny acted out his mission in hope of Allah's mercy and relief. He was aware of the Qur'anic verse that stated:

*And despair not of relief from Allah. Indeed, no one despairs of relief from Allah except the disbelieving people.*⁹

Living with hope in Allah's mercy and through hope, along with action and steadfastness, Tuan Guru reignited the light of Islam at Cabo de Goede Hoop. With inequality, oppression, and exploitation as inherent characteristics of globalisation in the twenty first century, and with the Covid-19 pandemic wreaking havoc with human life, livelihoods, and relations - whatever the circumstances-, Tuan Guru's teachings stressed that one should never despair of Allah's mercy. Drawing on this exemplary figure's fighting spirit, one should never give up hope but soberly strive towards a better and just future (even if one is imprisoned for one's beliefs).

3. Imprisonment on Robben Island: Transformative Action

Isolated from mainland Cape, Tuan Guru's activity during incarceration was dedicated to systematic transformation. His actions spoke of a heart and mind, pure, and focused on Allah in desiring to gain Allah's satisfaction. Tuan Guru's physical imprisonment failed to destroy or weaken his spirit because he was dedicated to striving for social change through Divine Justice. In Tuan Guru's world, resolute active striving - purely for Allah's pleasure and satisfaction - was an imperative for unbiased change and fair development.

*And that there is not for man except that [good] for which he strives.*¹⁰

During incarceration, Tuan Guru did not bewail his dire situation in self-pity and hopelessness but set out to write from memory a mushaf (that is, a copy of the Qur'an). Since the Qur'an is regarded as Islam's foundational revelatory text, it was intended to be utilised by the emerging and pioneering Cape Muslim community. Prior to this, the Raja of Tambora, who was exiled to the Cape in 1697 and who married the daughter of Shaykh Yusuf al-Makassari, had also penned a mushaf. For some reason, he gifted it to Willem Adriaan van der Stel (the then Cape Governor 1699-1707) who kept it as part of his personal artefacts.

Since this copy was not put into circulation, it did not have any benefit for the Cape Muslims.¹¹ It was the one that Tuan Guru scripted that contributed towards the Cape Muslims' transformation. Besides this mushaf, Tuan Guru busied himself with his Magnum Opus (henceforth referred to as the Compendium). This work consisted of, among others, supplications, talismans, litanies, specific Qur'anic chapters and verses, and for the most part transcriptions of Tawhid (theological) and Fiqh (jurisprudential) treatises.

For us to fully comprehend Tuan Guru's activities on Robben Island, one needs to understand his concept of imprisonment and his approach to the physical world. Tuan Guru, who was knowledgeable about the Qur'an and well-informed about the ahadith (prophetic statements) that complemented the Qur'an, extracted the following prophetic statements:

قال النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم: الدنيا سجن المؤمنين وجنة الكافرين

*The Prophet ﷺ said: The world is a prison unto the believers and a paradise unto the disbelievers*¹²

قال النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم: الدنيا ساعة فاجعلها الطاعة

*The Prophet ﷺ said: The world is a matter of an hour only, entrust it in obedience (unto Allah)*¹³

The Prophet ﷺ said: The world is an abode of deception and the Hereafter is an abode of happiness¹⁴

From these quotations, it becomes manifestly clear that Tuan Guru had a much broader awareness of what constitutes imprisonment. For him, imprisonment was not confined to the physical isolation and bondage in which he found himself. Tuan Guru's understanding of these ahadith and his commitment, in the application thereof, went far beyond that.

As a committed believer, Tuan Guru understood that the entire world could become one's prison. This understanding was firmly established in the realization and consciousness that this world, as well as the life that one lives therein, is short and deceiving. Tuan Guru's worldview was that real freedom, happiness, and success lie in the complete submission and total obedience unto Allah who is the Ultimate Reality. Disobedience unto Allah, or any form of transgression of His Laws, or overindulgence, and love for this material world, are all destined to imprison the inner self, the heart, and the mind. In the Qur'an, Allah says:

So as for he who transgressed, and preferred the life of the world, then indeed, Hellfire will be [his] refuge. But as for he who feared the position of his Lord and prevented the soul from [unlawful] inclination, then indeed, Paradise will be [his] refuge.¹⁵

Elsewhere, Allah states:

But you prefer the worldly life, while the Hereafter is better and more enduring.¹⁶

And in an earlier chapter, Allah says:

Every soul will taste death, and you will only be given your [full] compensation on the Day of Resurrection. So, he who is drawn away from the Fire and admitted to Paradise has attained [his desire]. And what is the life of this world except the enjoyment of delusion.¹⁷

The entire world will become the prison of a person who inclined towards misguidance, thinking it being the ultimate abode; and for that, he/she will receive no portion or benefit in the Hereafter. The correct understanding is that real freedom lies in a strong, committed, and principled heart that earnestly strive to achieve Allah's satisfaction and love; and consequently, one will enjoy eternal happiness in the Hereafter.

With this positive mindset, physical imprisonment did not deter Tuan Guru; he saw it as something that will come to pass and for him it was essentially a worldly test of his obedience to Allah with the purpose of striving and seeking justice. As such, physical imprisonment was a means of gaining Allah's blessings and mercy; one that demonstrated resoluteness and patience in the face of such calamity.

The second hadith, apart from having expressed briefness of time, denoted urgency of time in that it must be used most appropriately and effectively; that is, doing the right deed during the present moment necessary and not only when convenient. Tuan Guru, who devotedly acted upon these ahadith that stemmed from his breast and hand, left the mushaf and the Compendium behind; and these acted as foundational texts that shaped and guided the growing Cape Muslim community. The Compendium's originality and fundamental influence are apparent in the evidence led by Abdol Rakiep (Ta Tuan), the grandchild of Tuan Guru, in a court case between him and Achmat Sadick in August 1873, he said:

*Abdol Ruf was the son of Imam 'Abdullah (Tuan Guru) (who is) the same who brought the faith; Imam Abdullah was a Shafee. My priest told me that 'Abdullah did not bring books from other lands; he wrote books here. What he had he bequeathed to his children. These books he left, (and) from these books we were taught by Abdol Ruf.*¹⁸

Through exile and incarceration, the Dutch colonialists tried to physically silence Tuan Guru; they desired to break his will and render his opposition against their rule ineffective. They, however, only succeeded in amplifying his voice as a da'i (one who calls everyone to submit to Allah); he did this not only through his spoken word, but he also did it through the written word. After Tuan Guru's death, the Compendium, which he wrote, continued to have a wide influence among the Cape Muslims.

*And who is better in speech than one who invites to Allah and does righteousness and says, "Indeed, I am of the Muslims."*¹⁹

It may be argued that long before Robben Island became known as the "Political University of the African National Congress (ANC)" through the political educational activities during the first democratically elected president of South Africa, Nelson Mandela and his co-activists' imprisonment, this island was already a place of learning, of reading, and writing filled with the Qur'an's barakah (blessing). Through Tuan Guru's visionary endeavours, the Qur'an's light, and its guidance unto all of mankind, shone upon the Island and the Cape as a whole.

Tuan Guru's activities on Robben Island posited the Qur'an and education – using the Compendium as the guiding text - as the cornerstone of human upliftment and nation-building. Tuan Guru's committed actions were underpinned by a body of knowledge that anticipated the formation a cohesive community armed with resoluteness in belief in the sacred text (Qur'an) as a source of guidance and healing.

4. Al-Quran - Healing and Mercy

Being a hafith al-Qur'an (a memorizer of the Qur'an), Tuan Guru's existence was driven by this sacred text's message. In it, he found healing and solace in closeness to Allah and His prophet and messenger ﷺ. Tuan Guru wrote in his kitab that deals with health:

وننزل من القرآن ما هو شفاء ورحمة للمؤمنين ولا يزيد الظالمين إلا خسارا

*And We send down of the Quran that which is a healing and a mercy for believers, but it does not increase the wrongdoers except in loss.*²⁰

In meticulously rendering the Qur'an in book form, he endeavoured to proffer Allah's Word to the Cape community so that it could become a community that was aware of and submitted to Allah; one that did not differentiate among the oppressed peoples nor highlight the differences in a person's faith, race, ethnicity, culture, and language.

Anyone who studied the introduction of the Compendium would be able to see the fundamental importance that Tuan Guru attached to the Qur'an's recitation. He opened it by rendering a du'a (supplication) that one usually recites when one completes it; this is technically referred to as khatm al-Qur'an (the completion of the Qur'an's recitation). In another kitab on health remedies, he started it with citing the various surahs (chapters), number of ayat (verses) in each and to which era/location - Makki or Madani -, according to where it was revealed, it belongs.

The Compendium also contains various strategically selected Quranic chapters that he encouraged one to read; these either appear in wirds (litanies), or to be recited tabarrukan (as blessing), or wiqayatan (as protection), or in a du'a (supplication), or in the form of thikr (remembrance).

Through the recitation, Tuan Guru provided a means of communication and attachment to Allah; a means by which the reader speaks to Allah and in reciprocation Allah's Word speaks back to the reader. Tuan Guru wrote:

قال النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم من أراد أن يتكلم مع الله فليقرأ القرآن

*The Prophet ﷺ said: Whosoever wishes to speak to Allah, he should read the Quran.*²¹

The recitation offers the reader/reciter a sanctuary against loneliness and, especially, when he/she is in isolation such as Robben Island where Tuan Guru was held in captivity. Being confronted with a strange world where colonial subjugation and aggression were the order of the day, the recitation provided 'an escape' from the evil atrocities perpetrated against the oppressed; the Qur'an enabled them communion with Allah, the Creator and Sustainer of all the worlds, and through the Qur'an they sought Allah's mercy and protection.

The recitation of the Qur'an also allowed the reciter to spiritually connect with Prophet Muhammad ﷺ who is Allah's final messenger; so, whenever Muslims come across the Prophet's name in written or orally transmitted texts, then they request the Almighty to bestow perpetual mercy and honour on him. In fact, the reciter is by and large cognizant of the fact that Prophet Muhammad ﷺ was the recipient of these revealed words; and it is he who is viewed by all Muslims as the Qur'an's embodiment and the perfect exemplar of humanness.

Providing an insight into the Makki and Madani nature of the various chapters, Tuan Guru - in a deliberate way - established a consciousness of a geographical space other than that of colonial brutal rule; he created an awareness of a convenient space of holiness in which revelation descended. It afforded the reader/reciter the opportunity to transcend time and space in secure and comforting knowledge of belonging to a collective brotherhood of believers (that is, the community of One) in a spiritual environment far superior to that of the oppressor.

Also, the painstaking recording of the Qur'anic chapters into Makki and Madani eras is an indication that Tuan Guru was well acquainted with the periodic nature of its revelation in relation to Prophet Muhammad's ﷺ revered mission; that is, proclaiming and calling to belief in Allah's Oneness (Tawhid) in Makkah and embarking on Islam's nation-building in Madina. As far as one could assess, Tuan Guru found comfort in the knowledge of the Prophet Muhammad's ﷺ ultimate success after severe persecution whilst in Makkah and migration to Medina; it was here where Prophet Muhammad ﷺ built the first community of Muslims, in the face of perpetual aggression against him and his mission, and subsequently conquered the hearts and minds of all who lived in and beyond the Arabian Peninsula.

Having encountered persecution in the Archipelago's Tidore and incarceration in Southern Africa's Cape for having fought and stood up against the VOC's oppression and injustices, Tuan Guru found strength and purpose in and through the Qur'an and Prophet Muhammad's ﷺ perfect example; from it, he drew his inspiration to strive (that is, undertake jihād) and work hard towards changing the landscape of disbelief, accursedness, and sorrow. From the available evidence, one can conclude that Tuan Guru dedicated himself to spread and establish Allah's word wherever he went. Since Tuan Guru was forcefully exiled to the most remote outpost of Dutch colonialism, he accepted that he was in a strange place that was bereft of belief in Rabb al-'Alamin; and it was here that he ploughed his energies to bring about just action and true belief.

Tuan Guru's committed intent to firmly establish Islam at the Cape was borne out in a letter that he has written towards the end of his life; herein he requested his sons, Abu Qasim and Shian, to join him and help him at the Cape.²²

In conjunction with the Qur'an, Tuan Guru realized the need to prepare a text on Islam; a text that would educate the emerging Muslim community about Islam's basic beliefs and significant practices; for this, he relied on works that he had studied and memorized while a student in Tidore at the feet of his father.

5. The Compendium: Tuan Guru's Umm al-Kutub (The Mother of Books)

Tuan Guru, who was incarcerated twice on Cabo de Goede Hoop's Robben Island, used the situation to his advantage; he took time to produce the first known 613-page book on Islam written exclusively at the Cape. It was a work that was written under difficult conditions and in trying circumstances; but despite these, he successfully produced his magnum opus that was based on fundamental works popular in the Nusantara (modern-day Indonesia) that he had studied and internalised.

As one undertakes a careful study of Tuan Guru's Compendium, then it is quite clear that he constructed a text that contained a body of knowledge that was set out in a coherent and institutionalised way. He offered the racially divided community with a belief-system of equality and justice; a Din (way of life) far better in excellence in human upliftment and harmonious existence than that of the tyrannical coloniser.

The Compendium captured in its pages the Muslim worldview that was embedded in the concept of Tawhid (Allah's Oneness); and it is this fundamental notion that he disseminated among those who were in his midst. The individuals who studied under him were empowered and armed with the basic knowledge of Islam shared it with others. Now, the introductory pages of Tuan Guru's Compendium outlined a liberating worldview that stressed the significance and importance of submitting in belief and action to Allah alone; in this in the kitab, these essential ideas provided the student with an unambiguous and explicit exposition of Islam. At this juncture, the focus shifts to the notion of supplication that is an important entry point into the Compendium.

5.1 Du'a (Supplication): Tawakkul and Total submission to Allah

Tuan Guru commenced the Compendium, like related religious texts, with a du'a. The du'a, being used as the Compendium's introduction, speaks volumes of Tuan Guru's disposition. It revealed his frame of mind and heart. In exile, he found himself miles away from Tidore and his family and friends. Though he and others were at the mercy of the Dutch coloniser, Tuan Guru was aware of his circumstances and thus sought closeness to Allah. This he did through the constant – probably daily - recitation of the Qur'an and continuous supplications. Tuan Guru adopted a stance that expressed a spirit that was in total khudu' (submission) to and complete tawakkul (dependence) on Allah. In the Qur'an, Allah unequivocally says:

*And when My servants ask you, [O Muhammad], concerning Me - indeed I am near. I respond to the invocation of the supplicant when he calls upon Me. So let them respond to Me [by obedience] and believe in Me that they may [be rightly] guided.*²³

Finding security and consolation in and through the Qur'an, Tuan Guru also introduced the reader to the function and importance of du'a in the life of a believer. Tuan Guru wrote:

قال النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم: الدعاء يرفع مما نزل ومما لم ينزل فماذا ينزل ينكشف وما لم ينزل ينحبس

*The Prophet ﷺ said: The supplication is a benefit against that which was revealed (of calamity and hardship) and that which was not revealed. As for that which was sent down will be removed and that which was not revealed will be retained.*²⁴

Reflecting upon this hadith, one observes that it is filled with encouragement and inspiration; it motivates one to rise above any setbacks in life. From this, it may be argued that supplications to Allah have the power to bring about positive change. Supplications may even repel that which has been decreed upon us and this is based upon a recorded prophetic statement. The Prophet ﷺ said:

*Nothing repels decree except the supplication.*²⁵

Since Tuan Guru found himself under those oppressive conditions and having suffered heavy setbacks, he made sure that he commenced his Compendium with a supplication. He knew that the doors of Allah's infinite mercy were always open to all supplicants and that all supplications would be answered by Allah. In this regard, Allah says:

*And your Lord says, "Call upon Me; I will respond to you."*²⁶

This act of giving prominence to the du'a in the opening sections of the Compendium is in conformity with the Qur'an; the sacred text's opening chapter titled Al-Fatihah conveys that. While the Fatihah is the Qur'an's first chapter that 'introduces' the sacred text, it is also regarded by Muslim scholars to be the greatest du'a that presents Allah to the reader as Rabb al-'Alamin - the Lord (Creator and Sustainer unto perfection) of the worlds-, the Gracious and the Merciful, the Owner of the Day of Judgement.

Using the du'a, which is generally recited at the conclusion of a khatm al-Quran on the Compendium's first page, Tuan Guru in and through supplication introduced the reader to the Qur'an's intrinsic qualities; and through it, he presented Allah who is the Rabb al-'Alamin: He is the One who guides, who saves one from Hellfire, who grants pardon, elevates one's status, who erases sin, who causes entry to Jannah, who forgives, who satisfies needs, who protects and bestows well-being, and averts that which is bad. Tuan Guru opened with this supplication:

اللهم اهدنا بداية القرآن ونجنا من النار بكرامة القرآن واعف عنا بعناية القرآن وارفع درجاتنا ببركة القرآن وامح سيئاتنا بحرمة القرآن وادخلنا الجنة بشفاة القرآن واغفر لإحياءنا و امواتنا بتلاوة القرآن واقض حاجاتنا بفضيلة القرآن اللهم عافنا من كل بلاء الدنيا وعذاب الآخرة بإجابة القرآن واصرف عنا شر الدنيا و شر الآخرة بحكمة القرآن بجاه نبيك المصطفى سراج الدنيا و الآخرة صاحب الفرقان وصلي الله علي سيدنا محمد و آله و صحبه وسلم و الحمد لله ربالعالمين

In the name of Allah, the Gracious, the Merciful.

O' Allah, guide us through the Guidance of the Quran, save us from the Hell-Fire through the magnanimity of the Quran, pardon us through the protective care of the Quran, elevate our rank through the blessings of the Quran, erase our bad deeds through the sacredness of the Quran, allow us to enter Paradise through the intercession of the Qur'an, forgive our living and dead through the recitation of the Qur'an, provide for our needs through the grace of the Qur'an. O' Allah, protect us against the tribulations of this world and the Hereafter through the (favourable) response of the Qur'an. Avert from us the bad in this world and the bad in the Hereafter through the wisdom of the Qur'an. By the status of Your prophet, the chosen one, the illuminating light of the world and the Hereafter, the entrusted with the Criterion. May the Salutations and Peace of Allah be upon our master Muhammad, his family and his companions. All Praise be unto Allah, the Rabb of the worlds.²⁷

This specific du'a not only made the reader aware of the mercy, magnanimity, and bounty of Allah, but it also stressed the Qur'an's importance as Allah's living Word. The Qur'an, which describes Allah as the Knower and the Just, is a complete guide; for a central function of it, is to alleviate everyone's misgivings and life challenges. Through the du'a, Tuan Guru first and foremost sought Allah's guidance as reflected in the Qur'an. In using the suffixed first person pronoun in its plural form (نا) 'us', Tuan Guru included everyone in his supplication.

Considering Tuan Guru's circumstances, he did not only beseech aid from Allah for himself but had in mind everyone who were subjugated. He purposefully asked guidance from Allah for all who suffered under the VOC's ignoble rule. When he wrote the mushaf and inserted this du'a, Tuan Guru proffered the Qur'an as a Guide for everyone at the Cape; he did so without differing the one group from the other and he too kept in mind the future generations (that is, our generations and those still to come). Allah says in the Qur'an:

The month of Ramadan [is that] in which was revealed the Qur'an, a guidance for the people and clear proofs of the guidance and the Criteria.²⁸

In seeking guidance during adverse conditions, Tuan Guru prayed for steadfastness and uprightness not only for himself but for the Cape's nascent Muslim community as well. He supplicated that they remain obedient by observing the Quranic injunctions and receive blessings; and alongside that, they increase their faith in the Qur'an when it was recited and taught to them. Allah says:

Indeed, this Qur'an guides to that which is most suitable and gives good tidings to the believers who do righteous deeds that they will have a great reward.²⁹

And this [Qur'an] is a Book We have revealed [which is] blessed, so follow it and fear Allah that you may receive mercy.³⁰

And when His verses are recited to them, it increases them in faith; and upon their Lord they rely.³¹

In rendering this du'a, Tuan Guru sought to provide a sanctuary in belief in Allah through the Qur'an's recitation and teachings. Under the hardship of oppressive rule at the Cape, these acts were essential for anyone wishing to adhere steadfastly to Islam; in addition, these teachings were used for effective propagation and proselytization purposes. The supplication thus not only asked for Divine Guidance, but it too requested for the oppressed communities' holistic well-being of the external and internal conditions. On the external front, the supplicant would seek protection against any misfortunes and afflictions; he/she would request to be elevated from the adverse and oppressive conditions in which he/she finds him/herself; and he/she would wish fulfilment of their needs. As for the internal condition, he/she would seek Allah's pardon and forgiveness for his/her sins as well as protection against the fire of hell and Allah's punishment. In this regard, Tuan Guru taught that the supplicant should start every du'a with:

ومن شروط الدعاء أن يبدأ الداعي بحمد الله تعالى والثاني بالصلاة على النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم

And it is of the conditions of dua that the suppliant starts with the praising of Allah, most high, and secondly with invoking blessings upon the Prophet upon whom is the blessing of Allah and salutation.³²

The hamd (praising) of Allah denotes knowledge and realisation of Him and His praiseworthiness. The supplicant, in commencing this du'a with such realisation, acknowledges Allah's Majesty and Allah's Absolute Power of creation. In crying out for Allah's assistance alone, he/she acknowledges total reliance on Him as the Source of all existence and actively submits to Him completely with sure knowledge of His all-encompassing Mercy and Compassion.

By commencing the Compendium with the du'a, Tuan Guru proffered those who read it an ideal state of being. In other words, he offered them a practical way of existence; one in which tahmidu-Allah (praising of Allah) and al-Isti'annah bi-Allah (seeking assistance with Allah) are activities that demonstrate one's humility towards Allah in knowledge of and thankfulness to Him, and one's complete reliance on Him in total submission to His Will. This is the basis for the ideal state of an individual and it remains the foundation of ultimate human development. Supplication opens one up by making a person receptive to Divine Guidance and right worship; that is, one acts in accordance with the Qur'anic teachings and in harmony with Allah's Divine Will.

Apart from the teaching of obedience unto Allah, Tuan Guru also taught one how to honour Prophet Muhammad ﷺ, this is carried out by reciting the salawat (salutation) upon him and demonstrating one's gratitude for his prophethood and messengership. Allah says:

Indeed, Allah confers blessings upon the Prophet, and His Angels [ask Him to do so]. O you who believe, ask [Allah to confer] blessings upon him and ask [Allah to grant him] peace.³³

Thus, through du'a, Tuan Guru introduced Prophet Muhammad ﷺ to the novice; on top of that, he reminded the disparate Cape Muslims - who were so brutally dislocated and dislodged from their countries of origin as well as their families and friends - of the importance of remembering and loving the Prophet ﷺ in their hearts. Whilst beseeching Allah, the du'a's conclusion brings about an awareness of and honours the Prophet's ﷺ elevated status; it acknowledges, introduces, and establishes the Prophet ﷺ as 'the chosen one, the illuminating light of the world and the Hereafter, the entrusted with the Criterion (the Qur'an) to the reader and suppliant.

In recognition of and deep-seated respect for the Prophet ﷺ, the supplicant once again recites the salawat upon him; and the reciter concludes, in total submission and humility, praising 'Allah, the Rabb of the worlds.' - the Creator, the Nourisher unto perfection of all. Through this du'a, belief in Allah who creates, nourishes, and guides unto perfection and belief in the Prophet Muhammad ﷺ, through an appreciation of his elevated station as a perfect exemplary being, firmly grew and brought about resolve and strength that inspired the pioneering Muslims in their tahmid-Allah and isti'anah bi-Allah.

Following the du'a, the next important part of the reading is the ta'with from the satanic forces that try to dissuade one from doing the right acts.

5.2 Ta'with: Seeking Allah's Protection and Believing in the Resurrection and Accountability

Upon completion of the introductory du'a, Tuan Guru wrote and taught the following ta'with:

بِسْمِ اللَّهِ الرَّحْمَنِ الرَّحِيمِ الْحَمْدُ لِلَّهِ رَبِّ الْعَالَمِينَ اللَّهُمَّ صَلِّ عَلَى سَيِّدِنَا مُحَمَّدٍ وَعَلَى آلِ سَيِّدِنَا مُحَمَّدٍ وَصَحْبِهِ وَسَلَّمَ
لَخَلْقِ السَّمَاوَاتِ وَالْأَرْضِ أَكْبَرَ مِنْ خَلْقِ النَّاسِ وَلَكِنْ أَكْثَرَ النَّاسِ لَا يَعْلَمُونَ فَارْجِعِ الْبَصَرَ هَلْ تَرَى مِنْ فُطُورِ ثُمَّ
ارْجِعِ الْبَصَرَ كَرَّتَيْنِ يَنْقَلِبْ إِلَيْكَ الْبَصَرُ خَاسِئًا وَهُوَ خَسِيرٌ. وَصَلَّى اللَّهُ عَلَى سَيِّدِنَا مُحَمَّدٍ وَآلِهِ وَصَحْبِهِ وَسَلَّمَ وَ
الْحَمْدُ لِلَّهِ رَبِّ الْعَالَمِينَ

*In the name of Allah, the Entirely Merciful, the Especially Merciful. All praise is due to Allah the Lord of the worlds. O Allah put blessings and salutations upon our master Muhammad and upon his family and companions. 'The creation of the heavens and earth is greater than the creation of mankind, but most of the people do not know.'*³⁴

*'...So, return [your] vision [to the sky]; do you see any breaks? Then return [your] vision twice again. [Your] vision will return to you humbled while it is fatigued.'*³⁵

*And Allah put blessings upon our master Muhammad, his family and companions, and salutations. And all praise is due to Allah.*³⁶

He prefaced it with the heading:

هذه آيات يمنع* عين الحاسدين

*These verses prevent the (evil) eye of those who are envious.*³⁷

It thus doing, Tuan Guru confined the word 'eye' to the singular, and he attached it the collective of 'those who are envious'. Herein lies the underlying teaching that the begrudging or covetous eye should not only be seen as being practised among individuals, but, also from a collective - with a common ideology - to another, or one community to another, or one nation towards the other. In Tuan Guru's case, he sought protection for himself as well as the oppressed people against the evil eye of the colonial system and the oppressive regimes that are associated with it.

In studying the verses used by him, it becomes evident who this 'collective of envy' are. The verses, which sought protection against and avoidance of the evil eye, are found in chapters al-Ghafir and al-Mulk respectively. Both chapters expound upon the absolute creative power that Allah possesses and the signs that prove these; these verses warn those who disbelieve in and deny the Hereafter and Accountability. Surah al-Ghafir's verse 56, for example, aptly describes those whose consciousness and actions are exclusively embedded in the material world and the acquisition of it. In this regard, Allah says:

*Behold, as for those who call Allah's messages in question without having any evidence therefore, in their hearts is nothing but overweening self-conceit (kibr), which they will never be able to satisfy; seek thou, then, refuge with God - for verily He alone is All-Hearing, All-Seeing.*³⁸

Dr. Mustafa Khattab, in The Clear Quran, translate the verse as follows:

Surely those who dispute Allah's signs - with no proof given to them - have nothing in their hearts but greed for dominance (kibr), which they will never attain. so seek refuge in Allah. Indeed, He alone is the All-Hearing, All-Seeing.

Kibr, being understood as 'overweening (arrogant) self-conceit' and 'greed for dominance', connotes the meaning of hasad (envy). The nature of egocentrism accompanied by kibr appropriately characterises the colonising countries that were active during Tuan Guru's time; these colonial forces are the ones the constructed a capitalist system that annihilated everything in their quest for dominance and power of the material world. Today, the battle is ongoing against neo-colonialism and capitalism with the dunya-centric worldview of those who believe themselves as 'self-made'; and about these types of people, Allah says:

*Nay, verily, man becomes grossly overweening whenever he believes himself to be self-sufficient: for, behold, unto thy Sustainer all must return.*³⁹

Present-day Muslims should therefore safeguard themselves against the entrapments of Capitalism; this is an all-consuming exploitative system that manipulates the natural resources and controls human life, especially that in the oppressed developing countries. This system caused Muslim countries to remain apart from one another; it pitted the one against the other. In this toxic environment, each of these countries is vying for the patronage of Capitalist Western nations instead of finding their common ground and collective power; structures that are based on certain knowledge and the belief that Allah holds dominion over everything and unto Him is our return; and to Him, who is All-Hearing and All-Seeing, each of us will be accountable. These Muslim countries should thus form a united front against the dark forces of kibr and hasad; along with these, they should truly believe in the help of Allah for He promised Prophet Muhammad ﷺ in the Qur'an:

*Indeed, We will support Our messengers and those who believe during the life of this world and on the Day when the witnesses will stand. The Day their excuse will not benefit the wrongdoers, and they will have the curse, and they will have the worst home [i.e., Hell].*⁴⁰

5.3 Ism al-A'tham (the Greatest Name): Protecting and conditioning the soul

After teaching the ta'with with specific verses, signifying the insignificance of man in relation to the absolute Power of Allah, Tuan Guru turned to the ism al-a'tham (greatest name) of Allah as a means of finding strength, protection and development in the consciousness of Allah. In doing this, Tuan Guru provided the antidote to the dunya-centric nature of the unjust, the heedless who disregard the Signs of Allah and who deny His Power; the ones who believe in themselves as self-sufficient and reject Allah.

Many scholars have spoken and written about the ism al-a'tham (greatest name) and opinions about this special name and its purport vary; despite that, the agreement is that all the names of Allah are great. In commencing the subject, Tuan Guru (pp. 4-5) quoted a statement⁴¹ from a jurist:

روي عن امام أبي حنيفة رحمة الله عليه ان اسم الا عظم في آيات القرآن ثمان التي في سورة الحج

It is narrated from Imam Abi Hanifa may Allah's Mercy be upon him: Indeed, the greatest name in the verses of the Quran is (in) eight (verses) which are in surah Hajj.

He then referred to the following Qur'anic verses:

و الذين هاجروا في سبيل الله ثم قتلوا او ماتوا ليرزقنهم الله رزقا حسنا وان الله لهو خير الرازقين

*And those who emigrated for the cause of Allah and then were killed or died - Allah will surely provide for them a good provision. And indeed, it is Allah who is the best of providers.*⁴²

ليدخلنهم مدخلا يرضونه وان الله لعليم حلِيم

*He will surely cause them to enter an entrance with which they will be pleased, and indeed, Allah is Knowing and Forbearing.*⁴³

ذلك ومن عاقب بمثل ما عوقب به ثم بغى عليه لينصرنه الله ان الله لعفو غفور

*That [is so]. And whoever responds [to injustice] with the equivalent of that with which he was harmed and then is tyrannised - Allah will surely aid him. Indeed, Allah is Pardoning and Forgiving.*⁴⁴

ذلك بان الله يولج الليل في النهار ويولج النهار في الليل وان الله سميع بصير

*That is because Allah causes the night to enter the day and causes the day to enter the night and because Allah is Hearing and Seeing.*⁴⁵

ذلك بان الله هو الحق وان ما يدعون من دونه هو الباطل وان الله هو العلي الكبير

*That is because Allah is the True Reality, and that which they call upon other than Him is falsehood, and because indeed Allah is Most High, the Grand.*⁴⁶

الم تر ان الله انزل من السماء ماء فتصبح الأرض مخضرة ان الله لطيف خبير

*Do you not see that Allah has sent down rain from the sky, then the earth becomes green? Indeed, Allah is Subtle and Aware.*⁴⁷

له ما في السموات وما في الارض وان الله لهو الغني الحميد

*To Him belongs what is in the heavens and what is on the earth. And indeed, Allah is the Free of need, the Praiseworthy.*⁴⁸

ان الله بالناس لرؤف رحيم

*Do you not see that Allah has subjected to you whatever is on the earth and the ships which run through the sea by His command? And He restrains the sky from falling upon the earth, unless by His permission. Indeed Allah, to the people, is Kind and Merciful.*⁴⁹

The very first scholar that Tuan Guru, a self-professed Shafi' adherent, mentioned and quoted in his Compendium, was Imam Abu Hanifa; the latter was the founder of the Hanafi school of jurisprudence. Tuan Guru thus acknowledged and accorded Imam Abu Hanifa the highest respect as an Imam; and he invoked the mercy of Allah upon this Imam. One learns an essential condition for intellectual and spiritual growth - freedom from ta'assub (prejudice). One finds that Tuan Guru was, indeed, inspired by the character and teachings of Imam Abu Hanifa who also endured great sacrifice in the face of severe persecution during his lifetime. In fact, he too was unjustly incarcerated by the 'Abbasid Khalifah al-Mansur.

When one contemplates the various themes in Surah al-Hajj, it provides valuable insights into the significance of these verses; and, in addition, the context in which they were used. Speaking about sacrifice of animals and human control over it, Allah says:

*For your god is One God, so to Him submit. And, [O Muhammad], give good tidings to the humble [before their Lord], who, when Allah is mentioned, their hearts are fearful, and [to] the patient over what has afflicted them, and the establishers of prayer and those who spend from what We have provided them.*⁵⁰

Allah says further on:

*Their meat will not reach Allah, nor will their blood, but what reaches Him is piety from you.*⁵¹

Allah follows up the topic of sacrifice with permission to fight:

*Permission [to fight] has been given to those who are being fought, because they were wronged. And indeed, Allah is competent to give them victory. [They are] those who have been evicted from their homes without right - only because they say, "Our Lord is Allah."*⁵²

These verses inspired these two scholars (that is, Imam Abu Hanifa and Tuan Guru) and they drew their patience and steadfastness from them. In action and belief, they never succumbed to the dark forces of evil, oppression, and injustice. Righteousness and justice, as dictated by Allah, were the values that they stressed and upheld; they pursued a path that they fully embraced and submitted to, and for which they made great sacrifices for the sake of Allah. Allah says:

Says Allah:

*And to Allah belongs the best names, so invoke Him by them.*⁵³

Thus, they invoked Allah alone and they imbued themselves with the Perfect Names and Attributes of Allah. Through the eight verses and Allah's Perfect Names, they found inner strength and fortitude as they invoked their Rabb; in reciting these, they cleansed their hearts of everything besides Him, in 'migrating' away from the ego-centric vanities and ailments of their hearts, they developed Allah-consciousness; this is a state in which and for which they were prepared to die.

5.4 Ayat al-Sab'i al-Munjiyat (The seven saving verses): Safety and deliverance in acceptance of Allah's Will in total tawakkul (trust and reliance) upon Him

After providing a means of strength in purification of the heart, Tuan Guru taught everyone the issue of deliverance from any trials and tribulations, and he taught the notion of contentment in recognition and acceptance of Allah's Will; these are through the 'seven saving verses' as narrated by Ka'b al-Ahbar. Tuan Guru wrote⁵⁴:

قال كعب الاحبار رضي الله عنه هذه سبع آيات في كتاب الله تعالى اذا قرأتها لا يأتيك ولو انطبقت السماوات على الارض لنجوت باذن الله تعالى

"Ka'b al-Ahbar said: These are seven verses in the Book of Allah when you read it, then it does not matter if the sky comes in close contact with the earth you will be protected by the permission of Allah.

(1) Allah says:

قل لن يصيبنا الا ما كتب الله لنا هو مولانا وعلي الله فليتوكل المؤمنون

Say, "Never will we be struck except by what Allah has decreed for us; He is our Protector." And upon Allah let the believers rely.⁵⁵

(2) Allah says:

وان يمسهك الله بضر فلا كاشف له الا هو وان يردك بخير فلا راد لفضله يصيب به من يشاء من عباده وهو الغفور الرحيم

And if Allah should touch you with adversity, there is no remover of it except Him; and if He intends for you good, then there is no repeller of His Bounty. He causes it to reach whom He wills of His servants. And He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.⁵⁶

(3) Allah says:

وما من دابة في الارض الا على الله رزقها و يعلم مستقرها و مستودعها كل في كتاب مبين

And there is no creature on earth but that upon Allah is its provision, and He knows its place of dwelling and place of storage. All is in a clear register.⁵⁷

(4) Allah says:

اني توكلت على الله ربي و ربكم ما من دابة الا هو آخذ بناصيتها ان ربي على صراط مستقيم

Indeed, I have relied upon Allah, my Lord and your Lord. There is no creature but that He holds it by its forelock [i.e., controls it]. Indeed, my Lord is on a path [that is] straight.⁵⁸

(5) Allah says:

و كآين من دابة لا تحمل رزقها الله يرزقها و اياكم وهو السميع العليم

And how many a creature carries not its [own] provision. Allah provides for it and for you. And He is the Hearing, the Knowing.⁵⁹

(6) Allah says:

ما يفتح الله للناس من رحمة فلا ممسك لها و ما يمسهك فلا مرسل له من بعده وهو العزيز الحكيم

*Whatever Allah grants to people of mercy - none can withhold it; and whatever He withholds - none can release it thereafter. And He is the Exalted in Might, the Wise.*⁶⁰

(7) Allah says:

ولئن سألتهم من خلق السموات و الأرض ليقولن الله قل أفرأيتم ما تدعون من دون الله ان ارادني الله بضر هل هن كاشفات ضره او ارادني برحمه هل هن ممسكات رحمته قل حسبي الله عليه يتوكل المتوكلون

And if you asked them, "Who created the heavens and the earth?" they would surely say, "Allah." Say, "Then have you considered what you invoke besides Allah? If Allah intended me harm, are they removers of His harm; or if He intended me mercy, are they withholders of His mercy?" Say, "Sufficient for me is Allah; upon Him [Alone] rely the [wise] reliers."⁶¹

Through the teaching of these verses, Tuan Guru instilled hope and other qualities such as resoluteness and showing unwavering trust in Allah's Divine Will; this trust reinforced a dependence on Him alone during an era of inequality, injustice, and oppression as well as active resistance and opposition to it.

6. Establishment of Madrasah: Empowerment through acquisition of knowledge

Upon Tuan Guru's release from Robben Island, he set up the first madrasah at the Cape; this was in 1793. The madrasah symbolized a form of resistance and opposition to the colonial system. It was established under conditions of hostility by the brutal colonisers who oppressed, restricted, and prohibited the Cape Muslim community from propagating Islam; at the Cape, Christianity was the only religion that was permitted. Nonetheless, Tuan Guru's initiative should be viewed as the start of the overt communal expression of institutionalised Islam in colonial and post-colonial South Africa. Tuan Guru wrote⁶² that:

قال النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم: العالم أمين الله في الأرض لولا العلماء لهلك أكثر من أمتي

The Prophet ﷺ said: The learned scholar is Allah's trusted person in the land; were it not for the learned scholars, then the majority of my ummah (nation) would have been destroyed.

The use of this hadith that referred to education, preceded all other ahadith which related to various other subjects on Islam; be it on salah, zakah, fasting or hajj. It even preceded the hadith which defines Islam; the one that captured all the articles of faith and righteousness. Tuan Guru situated it purposefully along the margin next to the opening du'a on the very first page of the Compendium; and, then again, he inserted it along the margin at the start of the chapter titled Ma'rifat al-Islam wa al-Iman (Knowledge of Islam and Iman).

Reflecting upon this teaching and action, it becomes evident how Tuan Guru viewed the responsibility of being entrusted with knowledge and leadership. In the face of adverse conditions, he fearlessly and steadfastly exerted himself to the utmost; he carried out his duties as a scholar and he fulfilled his role as khalifah on earth. Speaking to the angels Allah says:

Indeed, I will make upon the earth a successive authority (khalifah).⁶³

In identifying the role of the scholar, Tuan Guru quoted the hadith:

قال النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم: العالم الذي يعلم الناس أفضل عند الله و أعظم من عبادة مائة سنة

*The Prophet ﷺ said: The learned scholar who teaches people is better in Allah's (eyes) and greater than (someone who performs) a hundred years of acts of devotion.*⁶⁴

In establishing the madrasah, Tuan Guru embarked on a mission of teaching, learning, and proselytising. At that time (circa 1790s-1890s), this collective act brought hope and cohesion among the oppressed (who, among others, hailed from diverse areas, spoke several languages, and reflected different ethnic groups). The madrasah, along with the masjid, fundamentally changed the Cape's societal face. The madrasah system offered a common home where the belief in Allah's Oneness was taught and disseminated; and through this system, the essential teachings of Islam were spread among the oppressed communities and oppressors alike.

Fundamental to the development and transformation of any society is beneficial knowledge and the pursuance thereof. In unchaining and liberating the oppressed mind and encouraging love for knowledge, Tuan Guru once again referred to a hadith that stated that:

قال النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم: محبة العقل زيادة الايمان ومحبة الجاهل نقصان الايمان

*The Prophet ﷺ said: Love of the intellect is the increase of iman and the love of the ignorant is the deficiency of iman.*⁶⁵

In laying the very basis for the development of Islam at the Cape, Tuan Guru stressed the value of knowledge. He emphasized the obligation upon every Muslim to acquire knowledge by starting, his ahadith compilation on knowledge, with the hadith:

قال النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم: طلب العلم فريضة علي كل مسلم و مسلمة. و قال العلماء المراد بعلم الفريضة علم التوحيد ثم الفقه

*The Prophet ﷺ said: The seeking of knowledge is compulsory upon every Muslim male and female. And the 'ulama (scholars) said: and the meaning with the compulsory knowledge is knowledge of Tawhid (unity of Allah) then Fiqh (jurisprudence).*⁶⁶

In conjunction with the hadith, Tuan Guru identified the two aspects of knowledge, in the opinion of the 'ulama, that are compulsory to learn - Tauhid and Fiqh. In emphasising the importance of knowing Allah above everything else, he stated elsewhere that:

أول الدين معرفة الله

*The first of the Din (a Muslim's way of live) is knowledge of Allah.*⁶⁷

The Qur'an and the Compendium were the foundational texts that were taught and used in the madrasah. In the Compendium, one finds that significant importance was given to the explanation of the fundamental formula: لا إله إلا الله (there is no God except Allah); a pivotal phrase that each Muslim child is taught from a very young age.

Now since the concept of Allah was at the heart of the madrasah syllabus, one finds it quite interesting that Tuan Guru referred to the Umm al-Barahin; a popular theological work that was written by Shaykh Muhammad bin Yusuf al- Sunusi (d.1490). This text, which deals with the knowledge of Allah, is in accordance with the teaching of the 'Ash'arite school of philosophical thought. Tuan Guru's Compendium's popularized this school's theological ideas, and these were taught at the madrasah; because of its significance theologically, many students transcribed this text from the Compendium.

Through the teaching and learning that occurred at the Dorp Street madrasah, the minds of the oppressed were freed and liberated. Since these young minds were empowered by the basic teachings of Islam that emphasized Allah's perfect attributes, they were able to withstand the evil design of the coloniser; and they consolidated with this critical knowledge, the cohesive Muslim presence at the Cape; and alongside this, they extended the presence of Islam for the subsequent generations.

7. Establishment of Masjid: Overt symbol and expression of communal Islam

Since the madrasah's establishment brought about a major change in the Cape community, it was complemented when the first masjid was built by Tuan Guru. The masjid, being a sacred space where the Cape Muslims gathered to perform their daily rituals prayers, was essentially a place that unified the emerging community. Concerning the salah's importance Tuan Guru taught⁶⁸ that:

قال النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم: الصلاة عماد الدين فمن أقامها فقد أقام الدين ومن تركها فقد هدم الدين

The Prophet ﷺ said: The salah (prayer) is the pillar of the Din; whoever establishes it, establishes the Din; and whoever abstains from it, destroys the Din.

There is no doubt that with the presence of Muslims at the Cape and the saintly scholars, who were exiled here before Tuan Guru, salah was already an established practice; it was performed individually and, at times, congregationally despite the prohibitions that the VOC imposed.

Historical facts, however, do not specifically mention that congregational salah was established in a coordinated manner before Tuan Guru's release from Robben Island. It was Tuan Guru and those under his leadership who agitated for the establishment of a masjid. It is known that Tuan Guru led the very first Jumu'ah salah (Friday congregational prayers) in a stone quarry in Bo-Kaap's Chiappinni Street near the centre of Cabo de Goede Hoop; this was in defiance of persecution. He also petitioned the governor for permission to establish a mosque. There is no certainty when exactly this mosque was established, but it was situated at the same premises of the madrasah in Bo-Kaap's Dorp Street.

The question that one may wish to ask is: What is so important about the establishment of the mosque? When it was established, the first visible structural symbol of Islam was set up at the Cape, and the athan (that is, the call to prayer) openly invited others to join, in order to lead/live a successful life. And it is herein that the assertive overt communal expression of Islam lies.

According to all sources, salah in essence is transformative. It lends itself to growth in remembrance of Allah; from the moment the person reads the phrase 'Allahu Akbar' loudly/silently, he/she cuts him/herself off from the material world. In the process of doing that, he/she exalts Allah's greatness and winds up the prayer when saying at the end 'al-

Salamu 'alaykum wa Rahmat Allah'; that is, one conveys peace and mercy unto all in word and deed.

It is a means - in form and supplication - of cleansing the heart of disobedience and kibr - pride. In the standing position while reciting the Fatiha the musalli (one who performs salah) professes gratitude towards Allah, in knowledge of His Lordship and beseech Allah for help in total submission to and dependence on Him. Moving from the standing position, the musalli extols Allah's greatness and exaltedness in uttering phrases of tasbih (glorification) and physically bowing and prostrating. In conclusion of the salah, the musalli sits in tashahhud wherein he/she testifies to Allah's Oneness and the servanthood and messengership of Prophet Muhammad ﷺ. Finding peace and quietude in such belief he/she then conveys salam to all. Allah says:

*Recite, [O Muhammad], what has been revealed to you of the Book and establish prayer. Indeed, prayer prohibits immorality and wrongdoing, and the remembrance of Allah is greater. And Allah knows that which you do.*⁶⁹

The congregational salah fosters societal cohesion and universal brotherhood of humankind through uniformity of goal, physical direction, organisation, form, and discipline. Allah says:

*And for each [religious following] is a [prayer] direction toward which it faces. So, race to [all that is] good. Wherever you may be, Allah will bring you forth [for judgement] all together. Indeed, Allah is over all things competent. So, from wherever you go out [for prayer, O Muhammad], turn your face toward al-Masjid al-Haram, and indeed, it is the truth from your Lord. And Allah is not unaware of what you do.*⁷⁰

Underlying the unity of direction (qiblah), lies the unity of purpose - satisfaction of Allah - which forms the foundation of the brotherhood of Islam. In the congregational salah, Muslims pray as one, rubbing shoulders with one another irrespective of their station in life and lineage. United, they share the same space and time, they face one qiblah, and they do so with one purpose; at the same time, they demonstrate and acquire discipline standing in straight lines and in unison following one imam in each posture and using one language (that is, the Arabic language). Establishing prayer in this manner means that Muslims are trained to appreciate the respective notions of equality and fraternity. When performing the congregational prayers, they are collectively conscientized in the doing of good by which, insha Allah, He, the most Kind, will bring them together.

'La ilaha illa Allah, Muhammadun rasulu Allah' - there is no God except Allah, Muhammad is the messenger of Allah -, such belief is expected of every Muslim; belief in Allah alone and in Muhammad ﷺ as His final Prophet and Messenger who was sent as a mercy unto all the worlds with the Qur'an as the final revelation. This belief is not expressed by merely paying lip service; nay, a Muslim finds certainty in belief in and through salah. Therein, he finds growth and orientation through the perfect example of Prophet Muhammad ﷺ: one qiblah, one purpose of worshipping only Allah who is the Lord of the worlds; one final revelation which is the Quran; one universal exemplar who is Prophet Muhammad ﷺ; one din which is Islam; and one community of believers who are described as 'Muslimun'.

Before one concludes, it should be repeated that the athan is a public declaration and an open invite to what was described in the previous paragraphs. Now, when the first masjid was built and co-ordinated congregational salah performed, Tuan Guru opened the vistas of the Cape Muslim community; through it, the Cape Muslim community consolidated and grew.

So, when the words 'Hayya 'ala al-salah... hayya 'ala al-falah - come to salah... come to success' are called out, it underlines why the establishment of salah should be viewed as a fundamental act in the life of a Muslim. Any individual who answers the call to salah responds to 'falah'; or, worded differently, would achieve ultimate success in this life and the Hereafter. He/she would be fulfilling the development of the self. To end, one is reminded of Allah's verses:

*Successful indeed are the believers, who are humble in their prayers.*⁷¹

8. Conclusion: Ongoing reward and immortality

Tuan Guru, (who is) 'Abdullah (Allah's servant), sincerely submitted to Allah by serving the Almighty well; he did so in firmly establishing the name of Rabb al-'Alamin at the Cape. Tuan Guru did this through the consolidation and institutionalisation of Islam.

Writing the Qur'an from memory, he introduced Islam's foundational text to the emerging Cape Muslim community as a functional text. Through his guidance and teachings, the Qur'an became a means of communion with Allah and was studied and recited as a means of guidance, protection, and physical and spiritual well-being against the dark forces of colonialism.

The Compendium that Tuan Guru authored, based on the knowledge that he studied and memorised in Nusantara, became the very basis of what was taught and studied at the Cape. The corpus of knowledge entailed in the Compendium dealing overwhelmingly with Ash'arite philosophical theology (Tawhid) and Shafi'ite jurisprudence (Fiqh), became embedded in the psyche of the Cape Muslim community.

Through the first madrasa and educational system initiated by Tuan Guru, education became the cornerstone of personal and collective development of the oppressed. Education afforded them a belief system and way of existence unmatched by that of the coloniser; that is, the Din of Islam that unified them and with which they could ward off the kibr/hasad of the dunya-centric colonising forces.

The madrasa and the first masjid, that was agitated for and established by Taun Guru, were tangible symbols of and signified the emergence of overt communal Islam at the Cape. The masjid and the coordinated establishment of congregational salah facilitated and furthered, a consciousness of the Oneness of Allah and exemplary Prophethood of Muhammad ﷺ; and the nation-building notions of discipline, egalitarianism, and brotherhood/sisterhood of humankind.

From the afore-mentioned, we assert that it was through his visionary and sterling leadership, his respective seminal writings of the first functional Quran, the Compendium, other writings and respected teachings that he inspired and guided the oppressed into a cohesive community; and, in addition to this, he laid the firm foundation for the growth and expansion of Islam at the Cape by establishing the first madrasa and masjid.

In conclusion, we affirm that there are many underlying lessons to be learned from the disposition, actions, teachings, and achievements of Tuan Guru that contemporary individuals and communities can still benefit from.

We beseech Allah in His infinite Mercy to grant Tuan Guru closeness to Him; we request that the most Exalted place Tuan Guru in the company of the prophets, the truthful, the martyrs, and the pious; and a reward never to be severed as the Prophet Muhammad ﷺ said:

When a man dies, his deeds come to an end, except for three (things): Ongoing charity; knowledge which is still benefitted from; and a good descendent who prays for him.⁷²

And lest our communities (that is, in the Cape and Maluku Utara) forget the immense contribution that was made by Tuan Guru and the important lessons that we have and still benefit from his authentic example, we - on behalf of our communities - beseech the respective governments (in his motherland Indonesia and in his adopted land South Africa) to seriously consider honouring him for the befitting and invaluable contributions that he made; that is, for having fought for the cause of justice and for having uplifted and empowered the dispossessed and the exploited educationally and spiritually.

9. Bibliography

9.1 Manuscripts

‘Abdullah bin Qadi Abdussalam 1781-1785. Untitled. Unpublished manuscript on Islam, Cape Town. (Achmat Davids identified it as Ma'rifah al-Islam wa al-Iman)

‘Abdullah bin Qadi Abdussalam. Untitled, Undated, Unpublished spiritual medicinal manuscript. Cape Town.

9.2 Books and Articles

Davids, Achmat. 1980. The Mosques of the Bo-Kaap. Athlone, Cape Town: Institute of Arabic and Islamic Research.

Marasabessy, Bunyamin & Faarok, Mohammad Amin. 2005, Tuan Guru Imam Abdullah bin Qadhi Abdussalam Perlawanan terhadap imperialsme Belanda dan pengasingan di Cape Town, Afrika Selatan. Yayasan Pendidikan Raudhatun Nasy'in, Bekerjasama Dengan Pemerintah Kabupaten Halmahera Tengah dan Pemerintah Kotah Tidore Kepulauan.

Muhammad ibn 'Isa. 1978. Sunan al-Tirmithi al-Jami'i al-Sahih. Dar al-Fikr. 3rd ed.

Muslim ibn al-Hajjaj, 1978. Sahih Muslim with Explanation of Al-Nawawi. Beirut: Dar al-Fikr.

Rosyidi, Irham. 2009. Sejarah Hukum Eksplorasi Nilai, Asas, dan Konsep Dinamika Ketatanegaraan Kesultanan Tidore, Malang: Penerbit Universitas Negeri Malang.

Salie, Ebrahim. 2017. Muslims in VOC Cabo de Goede Hope, 1658-1836. Land of the Accursed, Unpublished Symposium Presentation. Lansdowne, Cape Town: Islamia College.

9.3 Correspondence and Discussion

Rakiep, Nurel Erefan. 1982. Private correspondence with Mohammad Amin Faaroek from Tidore.

Rakiep, Nurel Erefan. 1994. Discussions regarding his first visit to Tidore, at Bridgetown, Athlone.

9.4 English Translations

A. Qur'an

Asad, M. 1980. The Message of the Quran, Gibraltar: Dar Al-Andalus.

Khattab, M. 2018. The Clear Quran, A Thematic English Translation of the Message of the Final Revelation, Al-Furqaan Foundation.

Saheeh International. 2012. The Meanings of the Quran in English. Al-Muntada Al-Islami Trust.

B. Ahadith and other texts: These were included and written by Tuan Guru; and they were translated by the authors of this chapter.

Endnotes

¹Note: The Saheeh International has generally been used for the English translation of the Qur'anic verses in this chapter. Q. 51:56.

²Q. 9: 32.

³ Rosyidi, 2009.

⁴ Rakiep, 1982, 1994

⁵ Marasabessy & Faroek, 2005.

⁶ Davids 1980, p. 44.

⁷ Salie 2017

⁸ Tuan Guru, p.128.

⁹ Q. 12:87.

¹⁰ Q. 53:39.

¹¹ Davids 1980, p.40.

¹²Tuan Guru, p.163.

¹³Tuan Guru, p.162.

¹⁴ Tuan Guru, p.168.

¹⁵Q. 79:37-41.

¹⁶Q. 87:16-17.

¹⁷Q. 3:185.

-
- ¹⁸Davids 1980, pp 45-46.
¹⁹Q. 41:33.
²⁰Q. 17:82; Tuan Guru, p.109.
²¹Tuan Guru, p.161.
²²Marasabessy & Farook 2005, p.121.
²³Q. 2:186-187.
²⁴Tuan Guru, p.6.
²⁵Imam Al-Tirmithi 1978, p.203.
²⁶Q. 40:60.
²⁷Tuan Guru, pp.2-3.
²⁸Q. 2:185.
²⁹Q. 17:9.
³⁰Q. 6:155.
³¹Q. 8:2.
³²Tuan Guru, p.6.
³³Q. 33:56.
³⁴Q. 40:57.
³⁵Q. 67:3-4.
³⁶Tuan Guru, pp.3-4.
³⁷Tuan Guru, p.3.
³⁸Q. 40:56 – Asad 1980.
³⁹Q. 96:6-8 – Asad 1980.
⁴⁰Q. 40:51-52.
⁴¹Tuan Guru pp. 4-5.
⁴²Q. 22: 58.
⁴³Q. 22: 59.
⁴⁴Q. 22: 60.
⁴⁵Q. 22: 61.
⁴⁶Q. 22: 62.
⁴⁷Q. 22: 63.
⁴⁸Q. 22: 64.
⁴⁹Q. 22: 65.
⁵⁰Q. 22: 34-35.
⁵¹Q. 22: 37.
⁵²Q. 22: 39-40.
⁵³Q. 7: 180.
⁵⁴Tuan Guru pp.5-6.
⁵⁵Q. 9: 51.
⁵⁶Q. 10: 107.
⁵⁷Q. 11: 6.
⁵⁸Q. 11: 56.
⁵⁹Q. 29: 60.
⁶⁰Q. 35: 2.
⁶¹Q. 39: 38.
⁶²Tuan Guru, p.2 and p.7.
⁶³Q. 2: 30.
⁶⁴Tuan Guru, p.166.
⁶⁵Tuan Guru, p.180.
⁶⁶Tuan Guru, p.163.
⁶⁷Tuan Guru, p.191.
⁶⁸Tuan Guru, p.153.
⁶⁹Q. 29: 45.
⁷⁰Q. 2: 148-149.
⁷¹Q. 23: 1-2.
⁷²Imam Muslim, 1978, p.85.

CHAPTER TEN

Da'wah during the Dutch and British Colonial period

Ebrahim Rhoda

Abstract

The chapter concentrates on Muslim mission within the Dutch and British periods' respectively. The chapter, however, raises the question whether one may attribute the presence of Islam to the VOC before it comments in brief on the political exiles and others. It reflects on da'wah and poses another important question prior to discussing Dutch missionary activities. Within this context, it locates Tuan Guru who laid the foundations of Muslim mission, and it outlines British mission among the Cape communities. It further argues that Tuan Guru's legacy was pursued by others such as the Free Blacks who were Muslims. And it concludes discussing Imam Abdol Sammat's mission activities at Mosterd's Bay.

Keywords: Free Blacks, Muslim Da'wah, Dutch Mission, British Mission, Mosterd Bay

1. Da'wah during the Dutch and British Colonial periods

As early as 1619 at the Synod of Dorcht in the Netherlands, church leaders requested the States General of the United Provinces to do all in its power to promote 'het voortplanting des Heilige Evangelium' in the East. In this regard the Dutch East India Company (DEIC/VOC) at the Cape made efforts to provide Christian instruction to the slaves they owned. Among these slaves there must have been Muslims.ⁱ

The influence of the Dutch Reformed Church (DRC) was indeed profound. In 1642, Batavia issued a placaaten (edict/proclamation) whereby the practice of any other religion other than the DRC was completely forbidden. The edict challenged those who dared to practice their tradition; they risked forfeiture of their property, punishment, or even being put to death.ⁱⁱ

These draconian laws revealed the fear the Dutch had for the Muslims. In the East Indies Archipelago, Muslims resisted Dutch imperialism and their efforts to monopolise the spice trade. Because these, Muslims endangered the VOC's commercial interests, and they were thus exiled to the Cape. Even here at the Cape, Governor Simon van der Stel unambiguously requested that they should not send these Muslim political exiles to the Cape for they encouraged the slaves to desert; and he stressed that the garrison here was too small to track them down.ⁱⁱⁱ

2. The VOC: An Agent for Islam

Yes, the all-embracing and powerful Charter granted by the States General, made the VOC a virtual 'sovereign state'. With such powers at their disposal, the VOC saw to it that the interest of investors was protected at all costs. The overwhelming naval military might have ensured that for more than two hundred years dividends of 12½ to 50% were paid out to shareholders. In fact, by 1650 the value of shares had increased by 500. %^{iv} Thus, the VOC shipped opponents who endangered their commercial interest to the Cape.

2.1 Political Exiles, 'Bandieten Imāms', and Convicts

During the Dutch colonial period of 1652-1795, more than 200 political exiles were sent to the Cape.^v These exiles were known as Oorang Cayen; and they were men of political and economic influence. They were prisoners of the state and Batavia dictated the conditions of exile at the Cape. In addition, an extensive list of imams referred as bandieten imāms landed here at the Cape for endangering VOC commercial interests.^{vi} Persons, who transgressed VOC laws, were also sent as convicts to the Cape; and many of them were also stationed on Robben Island and was a source of labour for the Company at their public works.

2.2 The VOC: Laid the Table for Competing Missiology

Obsessed that the DRC hegemony should prevail at the Cape, the VOC had inadvertently totally changed the demographic landscape by exiling so many Muslims to this outpost. Among these Muslims, there were luminaries of Islam. The late Achmat Davids has recorded the history of some of the early imams who were exiled.^{vii} Much is known about some of these 'ulama', (learned Muslim scholars) but little is known about many of them. We now know why these learned Muslim scholars were isolated from the mainstream Muslims in Cabo de Goede Hoop's Robben Island, Zandvliet, Constantia, and at many other sites in the Colony.

The Dutch always feared that political exiles would incite the Muslims in the Colony to rise against them, hence they were isolated. Even though Islam was not allowed to be practised or propagated, it was alive at the Cape during the Dutch period. More importantly, it will be shown that with so many respected personalities being placed here at the Cape with a substantial slave population, the VOC had in fact laid the table for competing missiology.

3. Da'wah at the Cape: Who laid the foundation?

Some historians of Cape Muslim history regard Shaykh Yusuf of Makassar as the 'founder of Islam' in South Africa. His prominence in the history of the Archipelago (his motherland) and his military resistance to Dutch imperialism, makes him the most documented exile, as both spiritual and political leader.^{viii} The arrival here at the Cape of this 68-year-old Sufi Shaykh and resistant fighter in 1694, must surely have been, with hindsight, a regrettable decision which Batavia took. Shaykh Yusuf's short five years at the Cape would irreversibly change the colonial landscape.

These irreversible changes were a direct result of his teachings of Islam here at the southern tip of Africa more than one thousand years after the demise of Prophet Muhammad. Today, three hundred and twenty years after the demise of Shaykh Yusuf, the Muslim community continues to practice Islam; and it is a religion that has been and is still attracting individuals from other traditions into its fold. I would argue that da'wah (propagation) started in earnest with Shaykh Yusuf's arrival and this mission continued throughout the Dutch and British colonial periods, right up to the emancipation of slaves in 1838.

Suleman Essop Dangor contends that the Macassarrene encouraged the creation of socio-religious structures among the Muslims at the Cape, and they, thereby, laid the foundations for the establishment of what was possibly one of the first socially responsible Muslim communities in the country.^{ix} Azyumardi Azra concurs with Dangor that Shaykh Yusuf and his twelve imams, along with other prominent figures exiled from south-east Asia by the Dutch, promoted Islam at the Cape by carrying out teaching sessions and religious services secretly in their lodgings.

Azra also contends that Shaykh Yusuf once again became a rallying point for the Malay-Indonesians, not to rise against the Dutch, but to intensify their beliefs and practices in Islam. This, according to Azra, implied direct propagation and teaching.^x The concern of the Dutch about the increase in numbers of Muslims at Zandvliet provides plausible evidence that da'wah was indeed taking place here (ibid). The Muslim missionary activity, at Zandvliet and perhaps at other sites where Muslim political exiles were stationed, was surely among the first examples of da'wah taking place at the Cape in the seventeenth century.

4. The DRC mission to the 'Slamse' of Cape Town in the 1700s

During the first 150 years of the Colony the DRC mission to the 'Mohammedans' coincided with the mission to the slaves.^{xi} In his historical overview of the DRC mission to the 'Mohammedans' of Cape Town and its surroundings, Haasbroek gives us an inkling of how seriously some Dutch clergy regarded their mission to the 'Mohammedans' or 'Slamse' of Cape Town. The Rev. Henricus Beck, who arrived at the Cape in 1702, is regarded as the pioneer of Christian mission among the Cape Muslims.^{xii}

As early as 1703, Rev. Beck wrote to the Classis of Amsterdam about his success with the conversion to Christianity of one person of 'Mohammedan' parentage. Rev. Beck served the areas of Stellenbosch, Drakenstein, and Cabo de Goede until his retirement in 1731. During his term in Cape Town in the 1720s, he established an oefeningshuis in a shed in Mostert Street where workers of the church and potential converts in the city could be taught the Bible. Rev. Beck was involved in the mission to the slaves at the Cape until his death in 1755.^{xiii}

During the last quarter of the eighteenth-century DRC missionaries assisted by sixty loyal church workers operated these oefeningshuise. They targeted the areas near the beach front where many Muslims and free blacks were eking out a living from the sea. Such oefeningshuise were also established in Cabo de Goede Hoop's Hout and Longmarket Streets where, I suspect, there must have been a concentration of Muslims and free blacks. It should be noted that these potential proselytes were not being taught the Bible in the established DRC, but in a shed or warehouse.^{xiv} Was this perhaps the origin of the apartheid mentality which still today permeates some sectors of the present-day DRC?

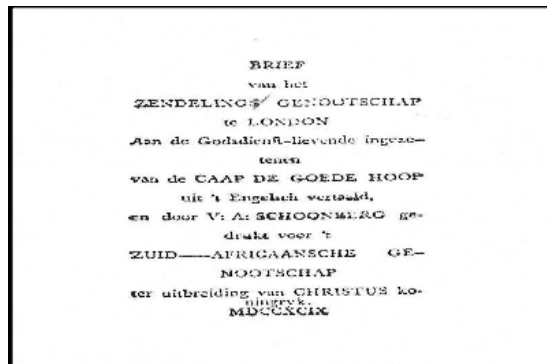

DRC ministers Rev. H.C. van Lier and Rev. M.C. Vos, and the Lutheran minister Dr. Jan Morell, were in the forefront of the mission to the slaves in the mentioned period. In fact, in this period the DRC Synod had suggested to the VOC that a seminary be established in the Netherlands for the training of missionaries to evangelise the heathens and Mohammedans at the Cape. Van Lier who arrived at the Cape in 1786, hoped in vain that this scheme would materialise, because so many slaves had reverted to Islam.^{xv}

4.1 Dr. Van der Kemp: His arrival in 1799

The arrival of four missionaries of the London Missionary Society (LMS est.1812) under the leadership of Dr. J.T. van der Kemp on 31 March 1799 really gave impetus to the missionary drive at the Cape. Van der Kemp's delegation came with an LMS letter. The letter requested that assistance be given to the delegation comprising of members of both the London and Dutch missionary societies.

The content also stressed that they should co-operate in taking the Gospel to the heathen. The letter was translated into Dutch and read in the churches. As a result, the South African Missionary Society (SAMS) was established here in Cabo de Goede Hoop in April 1799.^{xvi} Mission work would henceforth be properly organised. This was especially so during the last quarter of the 18th century and the early decades of the 19th century. The da'wah efforts of Tuan Guru and the other imāms should be seen in the context of the drive of both the Dutch and British missionaries.

Figure 1: London Missionary Society Letter

4.2 Cabo de Goede Hoop's Tuan Guru: His Presence

Even though Islam was banned and no masājid could be built, its adherents after 120 years of Dutch rule were active in and around Cabo de Goede Hoop. Tangible evidence is to be found in Muslims celebrating Mawḷud an-Nabi in a room of a Cape house in 1772.^{xvii} Not only were they celebrating the day of the Prophet's □ birth, but they were also taking the message of Islam to the slaves.

I wish to point out how crucial Tuan Guru's exile to the Cape in 1780 was for Islam's propagation and promotion. Tuan Guru's presence at the Cape became even more profound as it coincided with the period when Christian missionaries were co-ordinating their effort to bring the heathen, slaves, and Muslims into the fold of Christianity.

What would he have said when he became aware of the oefeninghuise of the DRC in the city? As a luminary of Islam, he would have said: You exiled me to a foreign land, stripped me of my position of power and dignity, tore me away from my kin, took away my freedom and now you are trying to drive my fellow Muslim away from the din of Islam.

Circumstantial evidence allows for the postulation that Tuan Guru in conjunction with the Islamic leadership was responsible for the da'wah which was taking place in Cabo de Goede Hoop in the 1780s, even though he was incarcerated on Robben Island. A network of communication between those incarcerated on the island and Muslims on the mainland was surely in place. Imam Joudan Tappa exiled to the Cape in 1707 engineered such a network among 23 slaves who were either on farms or in the Slave Lodge in their attempt to escape from the farm Constantia in 1712.^{xviii}

By 1786, the success of da'wah is lamented by the young Rev. Helperus Ritzema van Lier as so many slaves were embracing Islam.^{xix} Van Lier's lamentation is, in fact, an admission that some serious da'wah was taking place in the Cape during this period.

4.3 VOC's Ambiguity

Failure to act against Tuan Guru's madrasah (Muslim school) in Cabo de Goede Hoop's Dorp Street, on his release in 1792, demonstrates the ambiguity of the VOC authorities' position during that period. "The Dutch certainly did not welcome Islam, neither did they destroy it".^{xx} This ambiguity in fact allowed Islam to grow steadily in a clandestine manner throughout the VOC rule.

Moreover, the opening of the madrasah marks the dawn of the public practice of Islam in this expanding port city. The imminent demise of VOC rule at the Cape probably encouraged Muslim defiance of Dutch efforts to suppress the open propagation of Islam. This Dorp street madrasah would be the 'bridgehead' which opened the way for the proliferation of madrasahs (madāris) in the early nineteenth century.

As early as 1797, the public practice of Islam was acknowledged by the new British administration when permission was granted to convert a warehouse into the Awwal

Mosque in Dorp Street with Tuan Guru as Imam.^{xxi} Achmat Davids believes that this mosque came at a crucial period of Cape Muslim history; and, according to Davids, it played a tremendous role in the rapid spread and consolidation of Islam at the Cape.^{xxii} Whilst the year 1804 would be a watershed for Islam's public propagation, it also marked the beginning of the arrival of a plethora of missionaries. Under VOC Cape rule relative freedom to practice one's religion of choice was allowed.^{xxiii}

Though Tuan Guru died in 1807, the madrasah, as a pivotal institution, did not die. By 1832, there were twelve of these schools operative in the Cape.^{xxiv} John Mason^{xxv} believes that the established schools and mosques laid the institutional foundation for the sustained growth of the Cape Muslim community. It will be shown that during the British colonial period up to emancipation in 1838, the Cape Muslim leadership was giving the missionaries a tough time. The reversion to Islam of slaves, who came from diverse ethnicities, in large numbers, perplexed the ardent missionaries.

5. British Colonial Period: Missionaries' Responses

Surely one of the most plausible pieces of evidence of da'wah is to be found in the report of LMS John Campbell when he stated: "Mahometism is greatly on the increase in Cape Town. They have, I believe, five mosques, in which they assemble for their worship. About twenty free Mahometans [free blacks] club together, and rent a large house, to which they invite poor ignorant slaves, to gain them over to their party. By this method an alarming number have been persuaded to join them, and rendered ten times more prejudiced against truth, and against all white people, or persons called Christians, than they were before. The masters say that such houses are dens of thieves, and receptacles of stolen goods which the slaves steal from them. Perhaps this circumstance may induce masters to attend better to the instruction of their slaves, which may ultimately prove a blessing and security to the colony".^{xxvi}

A slave baptized as a Christian prior to 1812, could no longer be sold and this would have financially adversely affected the settler slaveholder. Thus, settler slaveholders were reluctant to have their slaves baptized.^{xxvii} Soon after his arrival in Cape Town in 1816, Wesleyan missionary, Barnabas Shaw, wrote to his seniors in London: "Nowhere is there more need of faithful preaching, than in this large and populous town [Cape Town]. As for the Dutch, it is to be feared, that they are generally strangers to the influence of Christianity on heart and life. The sabbath is profaned in the most offensive manner, both by the Dutch and their slaves. Some of them, however, do attend church, and a slave may generally be seen following his master or mistress, carrying the books to the door of the house of God, but he is not permitted to enter".^{xxviii}

The Rev. Barnabas Shaw is regarded as the founder of Methodism in South Africa.^{xxix} In 1822, the Methodists established their first chapel in Barrack Street. Between 1826 and 1829, the Methodists under the leadership of Barnabas Shaw and the Rev. R. Snowdall had succeeded in establishing congregations and chapels in Wynberg, Simonstown, and Cape Town.^{xxx}

Despite the successes of the Wesleyan Methodists, there was still a general concern about the inability of their missionaries to stem the tide of conversions to Islam in Cape Town. A Methodist missionary report of 1828 revealed this disillusionment: “But, oh, what little fruit has been seen from the labours of Schoolmasters and Missionaries on the various children who have been taught the principles of Christianity in this place! [Cape Town] With but a few exceptions, they follow either a base, sinful course of life, or are ensnared by the awfully prevalent delusion of Mohammedanism”.^{xxxii}

Missionary William Wright who arrived at the Cape in 1821, said: “It is painful to admit that the most respectable of slaves, at least about Cape Town, are generally Mohammedans and that the number of proselytes is everyday increasing. It has been my endeavour, within my humble sphere, to check this growing evil, but generally without success.”^{xxxiii} Wesleyan Methodist Reverend H. Tindall perhaps gives us an inkling of some missionaries’ perception of Islam in the 1870s when he wrote: “The great obstacle the workers at this church had to contend with for years was Mohammedanism. The worship of the false prophet was introduced into the Colony during the Dutch rule from Java. It gradually found favour among the slaves, and its popularity continued after the Emancipation. At one time one-fifth of the population of Cape Town was Mohammedan. To many of its votaries it meant little beyond cakes, coffee, and a red handkerchief on the head. But gradually it took a systemized form. Sultan of Turkey sent his blessing. The Mohammedans became a political power, and swayed elections. Nearly every church in Cape Town has endeavoured to grapple with this foe but has had to confess itself beaten. Mohammedanism has a great attraction for the carnal mind. Its merry holiday keeping, its noisy festivals, its vaunted sobriety, and its loose morality, give it a stronghold on the passions of people”.^{xxxiii}

Indeed, a most uncharitable view of Islam. But looking at the milieu within which such a statement was made, it is perhaps understandable. Imbued with their loyalty to and love for God, Queen, and country at a time when British imperialism was riding high, the dedicated Cape missionaries must have been perplexed by the conversion to Islam by so many slaves and free blacks. Christian missionaries claimed the high moral ground and Islam was regarded as ‘a false religion’, yet there were more conversions to Islam than to Christianity in some areas. Above all, if we compare the resources which the Cape churches had at their disposal with those available to Muslims, the active propagation of Islam could not compete, yet reversion to Islam was outstripping that of conversion to Christianity in the metropolis in this period.

Figure 2: Mosterd Bay along False Bay coast^{xxxiv}

The Rev. H. Tindall's remarks are, in fact, a tacit admission of the resilience of the Cape Muslims and the inability of the missionaries to convert them to Christianity. This, one can conclude was probably the case with the Muslims at Mosterd Bay during the same period.

6. Tuan Guru's Legacy: Living on through Others

The meeting of the Cape Family Research Forum held at my residence in Firgrove in 2002 was graced by the presence of the late Al-Haj Nurel Erefaan Rakiép, a fourth generation direct descendent of exiled Imam 'Abdullah Bin Qadi Abdus-Salaam, better known as Tuan Guru. It was at this meeting that 'Boeta Erefaan' said: "Ebrahim, here is an archival reference of an imam of your town."^{xxxv}

First, since I was born in Java and indeed in Samarang, and have no family relationship/connection whatsoever here in Africa, who could claim a right to inherit my estate, so I institute and appoint as my universal heir to all my estate, nothing in the world excepted, even including the fruit then in the garden at the time of my death, to the free Javan named Potro, born in the same region as me – at the time of making this last will resident at Mosterd Bay, and living with me in the same building: under this express condition, that, on my death, aforementioned Potro will see to it that, if such is at all possible, our great/high priest Achmat who lives in Cape Town and is known to Potro, or at least one of his children who might follow him as priest, is present at the ?? [illegible], to complete the funeral [literally bodily] rites according to our Mahomedaansche faith, and also to see to it, according to our faith, that on the seventh; the fortieth; and the hundredth day those activities are celebrated which are dictated by our faith concerning my death and according to my station/status.

And yet, if the afore-mentioned Potro can show that he made his best effort to have the afore-mentioned priest from the town present at my funeral, according to my desire, but he could not get him there, then he can use another priest for this purpose. But if by chance, at my death, afore-mentioned Potro should no longer be alive, I appoint in his place as my only heir, the free Javan named Ongo [~~crossed out~~], who also lives here at the beach, and was also born in the same region where I was born. And in case Ongo should also no longer be alive at the time of my death, I again appoint as my only heir the free Javan named Singomok [~~? name crossed out~~], also living on the beach here, and also born in the same region where I was born, imposing on both these heirs the same obligations concerning my will as imposed on Potro, to fulfil everything precisely, and so/such that, should they be negligent in fulfilling any of these obligations laid on Potro, or fail to carry them out, and being convinced of this, they must give up the inheritance and cede it to the church of our great/chief Mahomedaansche priest Achmed aforementioned.

Further desiring that no one else should be involved with/interfere with my estate; I hereby exclude [~~scludeerde~~] all official persons, hereby solemnly thanking the gentlemen of the Orphan Chamber.

All this done and drawn up at Hottentots Holland beach, at Mosterd Bay on the 29th September, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two, in the presence of the following witnesses, signed by us as witnesses: The adjacent signature was made by the aforementioned Abdol Sammat in our presence:

Figure 5: The Imam's Signature

*Witnesses: Rijk Neethling?, de Vos? Faure Junior? Neethling, and J A Fiek. The imam signed his name in Arabic-Afrikaans.^{xxxvii}

7. Free Blacks at the Cape: origins and status

The free black, Imam Abdus Sammat's presence at Mosterd Bay will be elucidated upon in the context of competing missiology of Muslims and Christians at the Cape. These fervent missionary efforts go back to both the Dutch and British colonial periods. So, the question is: What was the position of free blacks in Cape colonial society?

By way of background to the history of Mosterd Bay and Imam Abdol Sammat, it is necessary to understand the position of free blacks in Cape colonial society. According to Elphick and Giliomee, manumitted slaves were known as free blacks.^{xxxviii} Davids also applies the term free blacks to convicts who were brought to the Cape to build the new breakwater and remained at the Cape after serving their term, and to political exiles from the East who remained at the Cape after their release from Robben Island. Tuan Guru who was released from Robben Island in 1793 is a case in point.^{xxxix}

In addition, some free men of Asian origin who settled at the Cape were categorised as free blacks.^{xl} The free blacks were predominantly from the Archipelago (that is, the islands of present-day Indonesia) and some from South Asia, while a smaller number were of Mozambican origin and a few of Chinese origin. In 1830, free blacks made up 18% of the total and 35% to 40% of the coloured population of Cape Town.^{xli} Most free blacks lived in cramped conditions in the poorer quarters and alleys of Cabo de Goede Hoop.^{xlii} Shell refers to the formidable disadvantages which freed male slaves faced, including 'prejudice, poverty, the inability to obtain credit', and they too faced extreme difficulty in obtaining gainful employment in the Cape's oscillating and insecure economy. In most occupations preference was given to the 'poor whites' of in the Cape.^{xliii}

De Wet lists VOC officials, the burghers, immigrants, and free blacks as free men of the Colony,^{xliv} but the Company and burghers did not regard free blacks as the complete equals of Europeans and no petitions have been found from free blacks applying for burgher papers.^{xlv} According to Elphick and Giliomee,^{xlvi} the legal status of free blacks was ambiguous at best, and Shell^{xlvii} states that the exact legal status of free blacks is disputed by historians. Free blacks did enjoy certain privileges; they could, for example, buy and sell land and own slaves, if they could afford to; but they were also subject to legal restrictions. The house of a free black could be searched without a warrant. Curfew regulations compelled free blacks to carry lanterns at night and they had to obtain passes to leave Cape Town for a few days.^{xlviii}

The occupations of free blacks and the services they offered allowed them access to and residence on farms. Elphick and Giliomee list a range of useful occupations of free blacks: masons, carpenters, cabinet-makers, coopers, saddlers, basket-makers, tailors, shoemakers, hatmakers, haberdashers, bakers, greengrocers, butchers, and fishermen. These free blacks could support themselves, and they were thus not a burden to the farmer, but rather an asset.

Despite the restrictions on their movement, free blacks seem to have been relatively mobile in the pre-emancipation era. Some moved away from Cape Town into the interior even before Ordinance 50 of 1828 which made 'Hottentots' and free blacks equal before the law. This mobility coupled with their expertise as artisans afforded them the opportunity to find gainful employment on the farms.

7.1 A Hijrah (migration): from poverty to greener pastures

The free blacks' migration to the farms secured them a better livelihood. Their final movement to Mosterd Bay against the backdrop of the competing missiology of missionaries and imams in the Colony ensured them an independent life. Here at Mosterd Bay, they could live out their lives as Muslims under the leadership of Imam Abdol Sammat. Between 1815 and 1821, many of Imām Abdus Sammat's free black compatriots were scattered on farms in the Stellenbosch, Hottentots Holland, and Moddergat wards. The Opgaafrollen (census) enabled the tracking of the movements of some of the free blacks from Cabo de Goede Hoop into the interior where they settled on farms before coming to Mosterd Bay.

Archival records corroborate that Seding of Java had been living on the farm Paarl Vallei in the Somerset West area;^{xlix} Borno of Java on the farm Voorburg;^l and Salomon of Java on the farm Gustrouw, all in the field-cornetcy of Hottentots Holland, near present-day Gordon's Bay.^{li} In 1820, Imām Abdus Sammat himself was living on the farm Paarl Vallei in Somerset West^{lii} and, in the same year, he moved to the farm Gustrouw/Fortuintjie near present-day Gordon's Bay.^{liii} Cadir of Java (probably Cadier of Timor) was living on the farm Harmonie, also in the field-cornetcy of Hottentots Holland.^{liv} To date, it has not been possible to establish where Rachiem of Java lived before he moved to Mosterd Bay.

I would argue that in the post-Tuan Guru period these five free blacks from the Achipelago were Muslim pioneers who with Imam Abdol Sammat as their religious mentor, settled at Mosterd Bay in 1822. This enclave of Islam would be one of the first cohesive and sustained rural Cape Muslim communities and it is to them that the present-day Strand Muslim community can trace their origin. The Opgaafrol of 1822 shows that by that year Imam Abdus Sammat and, at least, five of his compatriots were resident at Mosterd Bay.^{lv} Smuts confirms that in 1822 some huts were already standing or were in the process of being erected.^{lvi}

7.2 Free Javanese Blacks: Joining Mosterd Bay's Imam

In 1823, Javanese (namely, Wiro, Bonzo, Azor, Ongo, and Marjam) joined the group at Mosterd Bay.^{lvii} Prior to 1823, Wiro had been living on the farm Herberg in the field-cornetcy of Hottentots Holland.^{lviii} Bonzo had been living on the farm Harmonie, also in the field-cornetcy of Hottentots Holland.^{lix} Ongo resided at 40 Cabo de Goede hoop's Waterkant Street in 1815.^{lx} It is not known where Azor and Marjam were resident prior to Mosterd Bay.

In 1824, Javanese Singo arrived at Mosterd Bay.^{lxi} Thereafter, fellow Javanese (namely, Azam, Kwassa, Nollo, Ronnie, Isakiem, Zingo, and a 'vryswart', (free black)) and Abdol van de Kaap joined the settlement in 1825.^{lxii} Java's Allie came to Mosterd Bay in 1826.^{lxiii} He was followed by Darius van de Kaap and his wife Minerva of Batavia in 1827.^{lxiv} While Java's Potro arrived in 1828,^{lxv} Java's Seding and Timor's Jamier reached in 1829.^{lxvi} Fellow Timorese, Sakier came in 1830,^{lxvii} he was respectively followed by Kameding van de Kaap and Java's Simon in 1832.^{lxviii}

Prior to 1824, Singo lived on the farm Fortuintjie in the field-cornetcy of Hottentots Holland, while Kwassa of Java was on the farm of Daniel Malan, most probably Altona, also in the field-cornetcy of Hottentots Holland.^{lxix} A free black named Alie was listed by field-cornet Neethling in the census of Stellenbosch in 1817.^{lxx} This could be the Alie who came to Mosterd Bay in 1826. In 1815, Darius van de Kaap and his wife Minerva of Batavia were living in Stellenbosch,^{lxxi} and they seem to have followed Imām Abdus Sammat from Stellenbosch to Mosterd Bay. In 1821 and 1822, they were resident on the farm Paarde Vlei in the field-cornetcy of Hottentots Holland.^{lxxii} By 1824, the couple were residing in a house on the farm Voorburg that belonged to Philip Hendrik Morkel, in the field-cornetcy of Hottentots Holland.^{lxxiii} They settled in Mosterd Bay in 1827.

Before settling at Mosterd Bay, Potro lived on the farm Zandberg in the field-cornetcy of Moddergat.^{lxxiv} Simon of Java resided at Paarde Vlei in the field-cornetcy of Hottentots Holland before coming to Mosterd Bay in 1832.^{lxxv} It is not known where Sakier of Timor, Zingo of Java, Kameding van die Kaap, Abdol van de Kaap, and Jamier of Timor lived before they settled at Mosterd Bay.

In the three years after Imam Abdol Sammat with his five compatriots settled in Mosterd Bay during 1822, another 13 free blacks from Java settled at Mosterd Bay. By 1832, at least 28 free blacks from Java and other Indonesian islands had come to settle along with other free blacks and Khoi at Mosterd Bay. Was this movement of free blacks of Indonesian origin, first to the farms in the rural areas and then finally to Mosterd Bay, co-incident? The evidence strongly suggests that their movement gained momentum between 1822 and 1825 and that Imām Abdol Sammat was probably the driving force in the establishment of the settlement at Mosterd Bay.

The undated census, c.1809 or 1810 [RDG 115] of free blacks and free born of Cape Town, referred to earlier, indicates that some of the free blacks who settled on farms in the Hottentots Holland basin and then moved to Mosterd Bay had lived close to Imām Abdus Sammat in the city centre. Amongst them were Nollo, Singo, Seding Sen., Seding the younger, Azam, Ongo, Salomon and Potro – all from Java.^{lxxvi} The table below (Table 1) confirms their residence in the city.

Table 1: Free Blacks in Mosterd Bay

List of Javanese free blacks who stayed in the same area with Imam Abdus Sammat in Cape Town, circa 1810.
No.	Name	Place of birth	Age	Address
1	Nolla (Nollo)	Samarang	40	32 Loop Street
2	Singo	Java	50	4 Draay Steeg
3	Seding (Sen.)	Java	50	In de kelder van de predikant Fleck
4	Seding (Jun.)	Java	40	12 Riebeck Street
5	Azam	Java	50	3 Draay Steeg
6	Abdol Sammat	Samarang	50	1 Zee Street
7	Ongo	Java	40	46 Water[kant] Street
8	Salomon	Batavia	43	12 Visch Steeg
9	Potro - heeft zyn pas verloor	Samarang	?	Woond in de gang van de priester

In March 1830, the DRC missionary, Rev. Paul Daniel Luckhoff, confirmed the Muslim presence at Mosterd Bay where he was recuperating in one of the four holiday huts on the beach. In his diary, he referred to the shabby reed huts and fishing boats of the Mohammedan fishermen.^{lxxvii}

The Opgaafrol for Hottentots Holland shows that 17 of the 28 free blacks of Archipelago origin was still living there in 1832. Some of those whose names are not recorded in 1832 may have died, or they may have moved elsewhere. In 1840, two years after Imam Abdol Sammat’s death, almost 50% of these free blacks of Melayu Archipelago origin were still living at Mosterd Bay.^{lxxviii}

The Mosterd Bay’s settlement had the benefit of Imam Abdus Sammat’s leadership. Perhaps the greatest binding force in the settlement was their imān (faith), which enabled them to resist attempts by the missionaries to convert them to Christianity. Haasbroek refers to this depth of imān: ‘In die eerste plek kan aangemerkt word dat die Mohammedaan baie sterk godsdienstig is en dat as hy eenmaal duidelikheid het, hy baie sterk by sy oortuiging staan’ (tr.: In the first place, it can be noted that the Mohammedan is religiously very strong and once he/(she) has clarity, then he/(she) is unyielding about his/(her) conviction).^{lxxxix} This deep religious conviction enabled them to preserve their Muslim identity as Mosterd Bay became a multi-ethnic settlement of Khoi and free blacks.

8. Towards a Conclusion

The population growth from 160 in 1851 to 800 in 1879^{lxxx} indicates a definite migration to Mosterd Bay; many of them having been ‘freed slave’ being Muslims who had embraced Islam. In fact, my own slave forebears were among those who embraced Islam; they, however, joined the settlement at Mosterd Bay after the emancipation. Archival evidence illustrated that Muslims came from the port city and its surrounding areas to settle in Mosterd Bay. Be that as it may, it seems that after Tuan Guru’s death that Muslims found themselves in different parts of Cabo de Goede Hoop. Mosterd Bay was one of those locations to which many Muslims trekked and settled. Since their numbers swelled over time during the early 1800s, they were handsomely served by Imām Abdus Sammat.

Earlier in this chapter, it was shown that the Imam’s testament revealed that he was an imām there. In fact, documentary evidence records several Muslim activities among the Mosterd Bay Muslim community between 1838 and 1864. Even though there is no conclusive evidence as to who succeeded Imām Abdus Sammat after his death in March 1838, the records highlight that the Muslim community grew at a steady pace; and it appears that this small but visible Muslim community only managed to open its first madrasah during 1864 according to the WMMS report.

When reflecting upon da’wah activities at the Cape in general and Mosterd Bay in particular, it may be argued that oral history coupled with documentary evidence (such as death notices and death registrations as well as Christian missionary records) accounted for the Muslim community’s history at Mosterd Bay during the post-Tuan Guru era. It may further be argued that this growing Muslim community maintained their religious identity because of Imam Abdus Sammat’s efforts in educating those whom he served and the practices (such as salāh, puasa during Ramadān, and mawlud al-nabī, rātibul-haddād, and janāzah salāh) that they observed.

To date it has not yet been confirmed when Imam Abdus Sammat arrived at Cabo de Goede Hoop. However, it can safely be said that he was still in the city when Tuan Guru died in 1807 by which time Tuan Guru’s madrasah had a student population of 372 slaves and free black students. At the time, when Imam Abdus Sammat had his will drafted in 1832 there were twelve of these madaris operative in Cape Town; and to my mind, it all formed an integral part of the collective da’wah effort during that period. Imam Abdus Sammat’s da’wah work in the interior was thus a continuation of da’wah that was spearheaded by Tuan Guru during the last quarter of the eighteenth and the beginning of the nineteenth century.

9. Bibliography

9.1 Primary sources

Western Cape Archives Records Service (WCARS)

J254, Opgaafrol for the ward of Hottentots Holland, 1816.

J261, Opgaafrol for the ward of Stellenbosch & Drakenstein, 1820

J262, Opgaafrol for the ward of Hottentots Holland, 1820.

J265, Opgaafrol for the ward of Hottentots Holland, 1821.

J268, Opgaafrol for the ward of Hottentots Holland, 1822.

J274, Opgaafrol for the ward of Hottentots Holland 1824.

J276, Opgaafrol for the ward of Hottentots Holland, 1825.

J283, Opgaafrol for the ward of Hottentots Holland, 1826

J286, Opgaafrol for the ward of Stellenbosch, 1827.

J288, Opgaafrol for the ward of Moddergat, 1828.

J294, Opgaafrol for the ward of Moddergat, 1829.

J302, Opgaafrol for the ward of Hottentots Holland, 1832.

J310, Opgaafrol for the ward of Hottentots Holland, 1838.

Testament of Abdol Sammat.

RDG 115, Undated census of free blacks and free born of Cape
1/STB 16/1

Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Records, Cory Library, Rhodes University

WMMS: Reports of the Committee for the Management of Missions.

WMMS Report for 1816 and 1817

WMMS Report for 1828 and 1

WMMS Report for 1864 and 1868

WMMS Report for 1875, 1877 and 1879

WMMS Report for 1880, 1881, 1882 and

WMMS Report for 1890 and 1893

9.2 Dissertations, Theses, and Papers

Ajam, Mogamed Tasleem. 1986. The rasion d'etre of Moslem mission schools in Cape Town and its environments from 1860-1980 with special reference to Dr. A. Abdurahman and the modernization of Islamic schools. Unpublished Education Doctoral Dissertation, University of Cape Town.

Azyumardi Azra, 2005. Shaykh Yusuf: his role in Indonesia and South Africa. Unpublished Seminar Paper on 'Slavery and political exile', Cape Town.

Dangor, Suleman Essop. 1994. A critical biography of Shaykh Yusuf. Unpublished MA Thesis, University of Durban-Westville.

De Wet, G.C. 1978. Die Vrybevolking in die Kaapse Nedersetting, 1657- 1707.

- Unpublished PhD, Universiteit van Stellenbosch.
- Haasbroek, L.C.S. 1955. Die sending onder die Mohammedane in Kaapstad en omgewing, 'n Historiese oorsig. Unpublished MA Thesis, University of Stellenbosch.
- Judges, Shirley. 1997. Poverty, living conditions and social relations- aspects of life in Cape Town in the 1830s. Unpublished MA Thesis, University of Cape Town.
- Ludlow, Elizabeth Helen. 1992. Missions and emancipation in the South-Western Cape: a case study of Groenkloof (Mamre), 1838-1852. Unpublished MA Thesis, University of Cape Town.
- Mason, John. 1995. 'Social death and resurrection: resistance and the ambiguities of Islam in Bahia and the Cape.' Unpublished Seminar Paper: Yale University Contemporary History.
- Rhoda, Ebrahim. 2006. The founding and development of the Strand Muslim community 1822-1928. Unpublished MA Thesis University of the Western Cape.
- Shell, Robert C-H. 1974. The establishment and spread of Islam at the Cape from the beginning of Company rule to 1838. Unpublished BA Honours Thesis, University of Cape Town.
- Shell, Robert C-H. 1976. Prosopography of Cape Town Imams, 1806-1866. Unpublished Paper Cape Town.
- Shell, Robert C-H. 1998. 'Islam in South Africa, 1652-1997'. Jerusalem: Van Leer Institute. Unpublished Paper.

9.3 Published secondary sources

- Campbell, John 1974. Travels in South Africa, Cape Town: C. Struik. Africana Collection Series.
- Da Costa, Yusuf and Achmat Davids. 1994. Pages from Cape Muslim History. Pietermaritzburg: Shuter and Shooter.
- Davids, Achmat. 1980. Mosques of the Bo-Kaap. Athlone: The South African Institute of Arabic and Islamic Research.
- Davids, Achmat. 1985. The History of the Tana Baru. Cape Town: The committee for the preservation of the Tana Baru.
- Elphick, Richard & Hermann Giliomee (Eds.) 1979. The shaping of South African Society, 1652-1820. Cape Town: Maskew Miller.
- Ergang, Robert. 1967. Europe From Renaissance to Waterloo. Lexington, Massachusetts: D.C. Heath and Company.
- Heap, Peggy. 1993. The Story of Hottentots Holland. Somerset West: Peggy Heap. 3rd edition.
- Hopkins, H.C. 1969. Die Nederduitse Gereformeerde Gemeente, Somerset-Wes, 1819-1969. Paarl: Paarlse Drukkers.

- Loos, Jackie. 2004. Echoes from slavery, voices from the past. Cape Town: David Philip.
- Mason, John E. 2002. A faith for ourselves: slavery, Sufism, and conversion to Islam at the Cape. In South African Historical Journal. 46.: 3-24
- Muller, C.F.J. (ed), 1981. Five hundred years: a history of South Africa. Pretoria: Academica.
- Rhoda, Ebrahim. 2019. The founding of the Muslim community of the Strand in the early nineteenth century, 1822-1928. Cape Town: DPB Printers and Booksellers.
- Schoeman, Karel. 2005. The Early Mission in South Africa. Pretoria: Pretoria Book House.
- Shell, Robert C-H. 2000. 'Islam in Southern Africa, 1652-1998.' In The History of Islam in Africa (Eds. Nehemia Levtzion & Randall Lee Pouwels). Athens, Ohio: Ohio University Press.
- Shell, Robert C-H. 1994. Children of Bondage, Johannesburg: Witwatersrand University Press.
- Smuts, Francois. (Ed.)1979. Stellenbosch 300 Years. Stellenbosch: Stadsraad. Stadsraad samewerking met Oude Meester Groep.
- Thunberg, Carl Peter. 1986. Travels at the Cape of Good Hope, 1772- 1775, based on the English edition, London, 1793-1795. Cape Town: Van Riebeeck Society. (Second series no 17).
- Van der Chijs, J.A. 1885. Nederlandsche-Indisch Plakaatboek 1602 - 1811, Eerste Deel 1602-1642.
- Van der Merwe, W.J. 1936 'Missions to the Moslems in South Africa.' In The Moslem World. 26(3): 287-291.
- Ward, Kerry 2009. Networks of Empire, Forced Migration in the Dutch East India Company. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Whiteside, J. 1906. History of the Methodist Church in South Africa. London: Elliot Stock.
- Wright, W. 1969. Slavery at the Cape of Good Hope. New York: Negro University Press.

Endnotes

- Van der Merwe 1936: 287-290.
- ⁱⁱ Van der Chijs 1885: 474.
- ⁱⁱⁱ Ward 2009: 9.
- ^{iv} Ergang 1967: 305.
- ^v Shell 1998: 2.
- ^{vi} Shell 2000: 330.
- ^{vii} Davids 1985: 33-78.
- ^{viii} Ward 2009: 200.
- ^{ix} Dangor 1994: 59.
- ^x Azyumardi 2005: 18
- ^{xi} Haasbroek 1955: 48
- ^{xii} Haasbroek 1955: 73
- ^{xiii} Haasbroek 1955: 56
- ^{xiv} Haasbroek 1955: 57- 58
- ^{xv} Haasbroek 1955:62-65
- ^{xvi} Schoeman 2005: 14
- ^{xvii} Thunberg 1986
- ^{xviii} Paulse, Michelle,2004. Information obtained from seminar paper titled ‘Escape from Constantia 1712’ presented at UWC.
- ^{xix} Haasbroek 1955: 63.
- ^{xx} Mason 1995 21
- ^{xxi} Davids 1980: 47
- ^{xxii} Davids 1980: 93-94
- ^{xxiii} Muller 1981: 13
- ^{xxiv} Da Costa and Davids 1994:51
- ^{xxv} Mason 2002: 12
- ^{xxvi} Campbell 1974: 5.
- ^{xxvii} Shell 1994: 359
- ^{xxviii} WMMS 11816: 14-15
- ^{xxix} Heap 1993: 177
- ^{xxx} Whiteside 1906: 66.
- ^{xxxi} WMMS 1828: 56.
- ^{xxxii} Wright 1969: 4.
- ^{xxxiii} Whiteside 1906: 73-74.
- ^{xxxiv} Van Riebeeck Society, Second Series No.36.
- ^{xxxv} The reference was MOOC 7/1/144, ref. 168 and 169.
- ^{xxxvi} Prof. Susan-Newton-King, formerly of the History Department of the University of the Western Cape; herewith follows her translation (WCARS: MOOC 7/1/144, ref. 168 and 169: Testament of Abdol Sammat, drafted on 29 September 1832.
- ^{xxxvii} Davids 1980: 97
- ^{xxxviii} Elphick and Giliomee 1979: 147
- ^{xxxix} Davids 1980: 42-45
- ^{xl} Elphick and Giliomee 1979: 147
- ^{xli} Judges 1997: 140
- ^{xlii} Loos 2004:38
- ^{xliii} Shell 1994: 39
- ^{xliv} De Wet 1978: 4

-
- xlv Elphick and Gilliomee 1979: 146 xlvi Elphick and Giliomee 1979:155
xlvii Shell 1994: xxxii.
xlviii Elphick and Giliomee 1979: 146
xlix WCARS: J254
l WCARS: J265
li WCARS:261
lii WCARS: J262
liii WCARS: J262
liv WCARS: J268 lv WCARS: J268)
lvi Smuts 1979: 213.
lvii WCARS: J268.
lviii WCARS: J254.
lix WCARS: J254.
lx WCARS: RDG115.
lxi WCARS: J274.
lxii WCARS: J276. lxiii WCARS: J283.
lxiv WCARS: J286.
lxv WCARS: J288.
lxvi WCARS: 1/STB 16/25.
lxvii WCARS: J294.
lxviii WCARS: J302.
lxix WCARS: J265.
lxx WCARS: J256.
lxxi WCARS: J251.
lxxii WCARS: J265 and J268. lxxiii WCARS: J274.
lxxiv WCARS: J288.
lxxv WCARS: J254.
lxxvi Rhoda 2006:171.
lxxvii N.G Kerk Argief, Lêer P31, 1/3: 2.
lxxviii Rhoda 2006: 172.
lxxix Haasbroek 1955: 138.
lxxx Hopkins 1969: 127.

Tuan Guru :

A Complimentary Portraits

An illustration depicting the teaching of reading the Holy Qur'an by Tuan Guru (Source : www.muslim.co.za/education)

TUAN GURU'S TWO TEXTS

A MUSHAF

A HANDWRITTEN MANUSCRIPT

MAQBARA TUAN GURU

The landscape view of Tuan Guru's Maqam in Cape Town, Western Cape, South Africa

Closing Message

by His Excellency Ambassador Prof. Anil Sooklal
Deputy Director-General: Asia and Middle East
Department of International Relations and Cooperation (DIRCO)

South Africa and Indonesia share a unique bond, borne out of its shared colonial heritage; its struggles for freedom; its common heroes, strong cultural and social ties; and a common endeavour to better the lives of its peoples. “Evaluating: Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari and Imam Abdullah Tidore’s Ideational Teachings: Reinforcing Indonesia – South Africa’s Relations,” insightfully provides the reader with a deeper understanding of how faith, fortitude and tenacity of the human spirit has a way of turning challenges into opportunities and inspiration.

The main protagonist of these writings are renowned anti-colonial freedom fighters from Indonesia, Abadin Tadia Tjoessoep (1629 -1699), more commonly known as Shaykh Yusuf of Macassar (Al-Makassari) also referred to as the ‘Father of Islam’ and Imam Abdullah Kadi Abdu Salaam (1712-1807), widely known as Tuan Guru (Master Teacher). These two prominent figures in their respective capacities laid the spiritual foundations of Islam in South Africa, predominantly in the Western Cape, which also became their resting-place. Their sacred shrines remain some of the most important religious and historical sites for Muslims in the country.

Shaykh Yusuf and Imam Abdullah, political exiles and memorialized spiritual leaders were of royal lineage and exiled to the Cape as a consequence of Dutch colonialism. They became icons of resistance against colonialism, injustice, and oppression, revered not only by Muslims but the world at large. The banishment of Shaykh Yusuf in 1694 and Tuan Guru’s in 1780 respectively, to the Cape, forms an integral part of South Africa’s and Indonesia’s history of oppression, discrimination, and subjugation under colonial powers, and symbolises in more ways than one, how the two countries’ histories became entwined.

This insightful and relevant selection of edited works fill an important gap, which effectively explores and analyses how these two eminent figures’ respective teachings were disseminated prior to their banishment and incarceration as well as during their time in the Cape and recollects their legacies that shaped South Africa’s religious, social and political landscape.

“Evaluating: Shaykh Yusuf Al-Makassari and Imam Abdullah Tidore’s Ideational Teachings: Reinforcing Indonesia – South Africa’s Relations,” are not detailed biographies, but a compilation of writings to remind people of how Shaykh Yusuf and Imam Abdullah (aka Tuan Guru) contributed uniquely to the development and cohesion of Indonesian and South African society. These informative writings afford the reader an opportunity to reflect on how out of the hardship of slavery and colonialism came inadvertent yet positive consequences that contributed to the areas of religion, politics, economics and culture.

These writings also demonstrate how faith, spiritual development and noble purpose can also be conceptualised through the lens of Ubuntu: the African ethic of community, unity, humanity, and harmony. The inspiring narrative of Shaykh Yusuf, the scholar, mystic, freedom fighter and humanitarian set a precedent for future generations of South African struggle heroes.

The significance and lessons learnt from Shaykh Yusuf and Imam Abdullah Tidore's teachings also speak to the most burning issues confronting the world today. More than ever before, we need humanity, and compassion, in forging extraordinary synergy in the fight against the COVID-19 pandemic. The pandemic is a human catastrophe that is not only upending lives and destroying livelihoods, but it is also deepening mistrust around the world. The fight against this global pandemic requires more, not less, enhanced global cooperation, collaboration, and solidarity. As the world embarks on its journey of recovery, it has become even more critical to collectively advocate for stability, sustainable development, and equality for all. As countries emanating from a common denominator of struggles and oppression, South Africa and Indonesia should look to each other to augment their efforts to overcome this global phenomenon, as it affects us all, no matter our creed or beliefs.

I would like to commend and convey my thanks to the Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia in Pretoria for realising this project. As is intended, this publication will be a useful reference not only for those who wish to broaden their knowledge but would also contribute towards the respective countries' policy making processes in taking South Africa and Indonesia's relations to the next level.

Afterword:

Opportunities for Further Research

Muhammed Haron and Ardhya Erlangga Arby

International Relations: From Traditional Actors to Non-Traditional Ones

When attempts are made to view relations between Indonesia and South Africa, then we usually look at certain issues; we first consider their diplomatic ties before assessing their political contacts and their commercial connections. In the arena of International Relations (IR), we evaluate these; and based upon our evaluation and appraisal, certain conclusions are reached.

If specific sectors are weak, then we take the required steps to improve them; and if they are secure, then we search for ways to stabilize them further by transforming these ties and taking them to higher levels. And in addition, they may beef up existing systems reinforcing them so that both countries can gain equal benefit from the existing trade relations.

In this co-edited text, the focus was not on the traditional politico-economic relations that officially started in August 1994 when the two democratic states struck diplomatic bonds. The text shifted its sights from these critical traditional state-to-state segments to address an understudied neglected area; that is, it turned its attention to two non-state actors whose lives had an indelible impact on the communities they served and that provided an insight of IR from an unimagined angle.

Critical Theory: Granting Non-State Actors IR Space

Instead of leaning on the traditional theories such as Realism and Constructivism, contemporary scholars considered fresh ways of weighing by relations among nation-states. They realized that remaining focused on the political ties or economic relations do not help to tell the complete story of the relationship that exists between the two countries; since people usually move with the traded goods, the presence in the commercial sector should also be considered.

For these serious assessments, contemporary scholars, who critiqued the relevance of traditional theories in not bringing non-state actors on the agenda, turned to Critical Theory; a theory that provided a workable frame that seriously factored their role in as an important aspect of IR that was ignored. It is an IR theory that is not only critical but one that was and remains flexible; it is flexible in the sense that it accommodates and absorbs various types of relations if they assist to enrich everyone's understanding of IR from a different but complementary dimension.

IR Actors: Religious Scholars and Cultural Activists

Worded another way, if one comprehends IR to be broader than the restricted traditional understanding advocated by Realists and others, then non-state actors should be considered as bona fide players in the IR arena. Though they are not identified as political actors as such, they are – depending upon their profession and activities - understood as IR actors or activist.

A religious leader (such as Shaykh Yusuf or Imam ‘Abdullah), for example, use religion as the binding force that connects him with those who follow him and those who share the same beliefs and perform the same rituals. In this edited work, both Shaykh Yusuf and Imam ‘Abdullah are seen as religious leaders that have helped to cement the relations between the communities (Makassar and Tidore) from where they hailed and the communities (Ceylon and Cabo de Goede Hoop Muslims) that they guided while in exile.

Compared to the religious leader, the heritage activists would stress the importance of protecting their cultural artefacts. If we take Imam ‘Abdullah’s shield and sword as examples (see the pictures of these in this publication), then one assumes that some Indonesian cultural activists would want to reach an agreement via a form of mutual understanding that the Imam ‘Abdullah artefacts be brought back to Tidore where they would want them to be preserved and conserved in the Tidore museum or perhaps in the country’s national museum in Jakarta. The public display of these artefacts would convey two things: the one is that they would remind viewers that these were with the Imam while he remained and died in exile in Cabo de Goede Hoop, and other is that for more than two centuries these have been as part of the family heirloom, and they have been neatly preserved.

Keeping in mind these matters, the purpose of addressing them was to point out that IR, as a field of study, has radically changed over the past few decades; conventional scholarship has slowly given way for the pursuance of robust scholarship. During this post-modern period new theories have shaped our understanding through different lenses. So, when we – as well as the contributors in this book - looked at the lives of the Shaykh and the Imam, who were political prisoners and when scholars evaluated their struggle against the VOC, the evidence underlined that, though they were regarded as religious leaders, they should be seen as political personalities. They were active politically during their respective historical timeframes; and during those periods, they were apprehended and incarcerated by the VOC not because of their religious beliefs and acts – though they were indeed motivated by these – but because of their political activism against VOC rule.

This Project

After the Pretoria-based Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia published its first edited text that celebrated the relations that were forged between Indonesia and South Africa, its staff planned another project; one that did not address conventional bilateral relations but one that shifted its focus to non-state actors.

They realized that many political prisoners and others were forcibly taken from the Melayu Archipelago and banished to Cabo de Goede Hoop. Since very few research projects have provided insights into those who were incarcerated at Cabo de Goede Hoop, it was agreed with a handful of scholars and researchers to explore the lives of at least two scholars who hailed from Makassar and Tidore respectively.

It thus embarked on this edited work and the Embassy succeeded to gather a few who were willing to share their thoughts on Shaykh Yusuf and Imam ‘Abdullah. As stated, the Embassy staff wanted this text to be distinctive – and indeed it is - from some of the previous historical books that discussed the biographies of these two personalities.

This edited text thus adopted a diverse approach with a different focus from earlier publications. Since it was established that the two scholars’ ethical teachings and principles have been captured in their extant writings, it requested some of the scholars to bring those ideas to the fore. While a few successfully did that, others evaluated other aspects such as the impact of their ideas on earlier and subsequent Muslim communities.

As already mentioned, the Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia extended invites to potential contributors/authors and requested that they give attention to the ideas and writings of these two iconic figures. As co-editors, we were generally satisfied that some of the chapters assessed their ideational challenges, reflected on, at least, one of their works, and evaluated their impact on later communities especially the religious leadership in both South Africa and Indonesia.

The Way Forward

Since this edited text essentially explored and analysed Shaykh Yusuf and Imam ‘Abdullah’s respective teachings, it uncovered, where possible, how these were developed and disseminated prior to their banishment/incarceration at Cabo de Goede Hoop and throughout the period that they were stationed there. Now, these chapters should be seen as complementary and foundational studies that should be used by other researchers for further investigation and exploration.

When we, for example, scan the list of manuscripts that were written by Shaykh Yusuf, one observed from the present survey that one of the co-editors undertook that only a handful had been studied by some scholars. And when we shift to Imam ‘Abdullah’s Compendium, we also found that it is a work that should be carefully studied to illustrate the extent of the Imam’s knowledge.

That said, we hope that this edited work filled some of the scholarly gaps; and we also wish that others will build on these chapters by pursuing related studies. We too would want to see scholars from Indonesia and South Africa together explore and investigate the lives of other Orang Cayen who have indeed left behind legacies that still need to be assessed. And we would want to argue that this publication forms part of a set of texts that underscore the relations from below between Indonesia and South Africa.

Biographies

Anil Sooklal

Ambassador Anil Sooklal is the Deputy Director-General responsible for Asia and the Middle East, Department of International Relations and Cooperation. He is also South Africa's BRICS Sherpa, G20 Sherpa and IBSA (India-Brazil-South Africa) Sherpa and Focal Point for IORA (Indian Ocean Rim Association for Regional Cooperation) and FOCAC (Forum for China-Africa Cooperation). During his tenure as Ambassador in Brussels he served as Chair of SADC Committee of Ambassadors (2008 – 2009), Chair of the Tripartite (SADC, EAC, COMESA) Committee of Ambassadors (2008 – 2009), Member of the Bureau of the ACP Committee of Ambassadors (2007), and Deputy Chair of the Sustainable Development Committee, ACP (2011). Before joining government in 1995, he followed an academic career, having held lecturing positions at the University of KwaZulu-Natal and University of South Africa (UNISA). During his academic career, he participated in over 20 international academic conferences and 40 national academic conferences. Ambassador Sooklal published more than 20 articles in both local and international Journals and he served as

Ardhya Erlangga Arby

He is a career diplomat at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Indonesia and the Minister Counsellor/Political Affairs and Head of Chancery at the Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia in Pretoria (March 2018 – September 2021).

Azyumardi Azra

He is currently a senior Professor of Islamic History and Culture at the Faculty of Adab and Humanities, Syarif Hidayatullah State Islamic University (UIN) of Jakarta. Prof. Azyumardi, who obtained his MA and PhD from Columbia University, is recognized as one of Indonesia's public intellectuals who holds numerous positions, both in government and in higher education sectors. He was, among others, Special Staff to former Vice-President H.E. Mr. Jusuf Kalla; formerly Deputy for Social Welfare at the Office of Vice-President of the Republic of Indonesia; former Chancellor and former Director of Graduate School at UIN. He authored and edited many works; among these, he authored The Origins of Islamic Reformism in Southeast Asia (2004) and he co-edited Sejarah Kebudayaan Islam Indonesia: Institusi dan Gerakan (2015). He has been an international visiting fellow at various reputable international universities. In 2010, he received the title of Commander of the Order of the British Empire (CBE), an honorary order from the United Kingdom.

Baharuddin Abd Rahman

Dr. Abd Rahman is presently a lecturer at Jakarta's Sekolah Tinggi Agama Islam (STAI) where he also serves as the head of the Quality Assurance. He completed his studied in the International Islamic University's Faculty of Islamic Revealed Knowledge in Malaysia and he graduated with an MA from IIUM's International Institute of Islamic Thought and Civilization with the focus on 'Islamic Thought'. Thereafter, he joined Ibnu Khaldun University, Bogor, West Java where he completed an MA that concentrated on Islamic Education Management. Several articles were published by Qafid Academi; among these are: 'Penampakan Diri Tuhan: al-Makassari dan Martabat Tujuh' (2015), 'Filsafat Pendidikan Islam: Rekam Jejak Bangunan Islamisasi Ilmu Pengetahuan' (2016), 'Menyongsong Teguhkan Universitas Islam' (2016), 'Epistemologi Islam berbasis Sufistik' (2019), and 'Majmu al-Mutun fi Mukhtalifil Funun' (2019).

David John Rawson

David Rawson has worked extensively as an interpreter and translator of Indonesian since 1986. He is a graduate of the Indonesian Language Course, ADF School of Languages (1984) and has studied Indonesian language and literature at Universitas Gadjah Mada, Yogyakarta for extended periods (1985-1986 and 2016-2020). Over the last several years he has translated, edited and reviewed articles for several academic journals on a range of topics including Indonesian colonial history, Islamic education, and literary studies. Since the late 1980s he has also acted as an interpreter for many bilateral meetings and conferences held in Jakarta and Canberra.'

Ebrahim Rhoda

Mr. Rhoda was attached to the Strand Moslem Primary School where he taught for 35 years between 1959 and 1993; and for 3 years, he was also its principal. Upon retirement, Mr. Rhoda turned his focus to historical research. Mr. Rhoda was a founder member of the Strand Moslem Council, Macassar Moslem Council, and the Cape Family Research Forum (CFRF). After he completed a training course on archival research that jointly organized by UCT and UWC staffers, he was permitted to register for the MA degree at UWC in 2003. By 2005, he received the Shahmohamed/Muslim Views award for the best research paper; and towards the end of 2006, he graduated cum laude with an MA in Historical Studies. In 2009, he was recognized by the Western Cape's Department of Cultural Affairs and Sports for his contribution towards public awareness and documentation of heritage resources. Between 2010 and 2020, he has been active in research projects and succeeded to author a few articles and books. In 2011, he presented a paper on Shaykh Yusuf Macassar at Makassar's Hasanuddin University; and during 2013 and 2017, he presented papers on the Indonesian diaspora in Jakarta. One of the books that he authored with contributions from Maulana Yusuf Karaan and Prof. Doria Daniels was The Strand Muslim Community (1822-1966): A Historical Overview (2014).

Ebrahim Salie

Mr. Ebrahim Salie used to teach for many years at Spes Bona Senior Secondary. He is an independent South African historian and avid archival researcher; so far, he has conducted and written pioneering work on Muslims in Dutch and British colonial Cape Town and their heritage in pre-and-post Apartheid South Africa. All his writings can be directly accessed at <https://independent.academia.edu/ESalie>. He has uploaded unpublished works that cover Shaykh Yusuf and Imam 'Abdullah ibn Qadi 'Abdus Salam.

Luqman Rakiep

Mr. Luqman Rakiep is the son of Al-Haj Nurel Erefan and is a fifth generation descendent of Tuan Guru Abdullah bin Qadi ‘Abdus-Salam. Besides being an unpublished poet, he studied in the Faculty of Hadith at the International Islamic University of Medina as well as in the Faculty of Education at the University of Cape Town. He is currently teaching Economics and Technology at a Senior Secondary School in Greater Cape Town’s Mitchell’s Plain area.

Muhammed Haron

He was formerly attached to the University of the Western Cape. After retirement from the University of Botswana where he taught Religious Studies, he became an Associate Researcher at Stellenbosch University and a Senior Researcher for South Africa’s Al Jama-ah Party. He also specialized in International Relations and consequently authored, among others, Connecting South – South Communities: The Narrative of South Africa Malaysia Relations (Newcastle-upon-Tyne 2018); before this he co-edited Muslim Higher Education in Postcolonial Africa (London 2016) and Law, Religion & Environment in Africa (Stellenbosch 2020). He is editor of the Annual Review of Islam in Africa (UCT) and editor-in-chief of Research Africa Reviews (Duke University).

Mustari Mustafa

He is a Professor of Philosophy at Alaudin State Islamic University (Universitas Islam Negeri/UIN Alaudin) in Makassar, South Sulawesi. Prof. Mustafa obtained his Ph.D in 2009 from Yogyakarta’s University of Gadjah Mada. Prof. Mustafa is a devoted educator, researcher, and a writer by profession. He has written several journal articles and conference papers; among the books that he wrote is Dakwah Sufisme: Syekh Yusuf Al Makassar (2010). Most of his writings focused on Islamic philosophy, teaching philosophy, and values. From 2017 to 2021, he was assigned to be the Indonesian Education and Cultural Attache of the Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia in Bangkok, Thailand.

Muttaqim Rakiep

Mr. Muttaqin Rakiep is the son of Al-Haj Nurel Erefan and he, like his brother, a fifth generation descendent of Tuan Guru Abdullah bin Qadi ‘Abdus-Salam. He studied at the International Islamic University of Medina and at UCT; prior to this, he graduated from Hewat Teachers Training College. He also studied at the Universiti Kebangsaan Malaysia. And he is currently the head of the Department of English at one of the public schools in Greater Cape Town.

Muzdalifah Sahib

Dr. Sahib holds a PhD degree from the University of South Africa (UNISA). She is currently a lecturer at Alaudin State Islamic University (Universitas Islam Negeri/UIN Alaudin) in Makassar, South Sulawesi. She has a strong background in Islamic history and has completed various research projects that zoomed in on Shaykh Yusuf; while some were presented at conferences, others were published in journals. Among the books that she edited and authored, she published Commentaries on the Works of Sheikh Yusuf al Makassar: (in Zubdat al Asrar (The Essence of the Secrets) (2014) and Syeikh Yusuf al-Maqassary dan Pembaruannya dalam Sūfisme (2016).

Naledi Pandor

Naledi Pandor is South Africa's Minister of International Relations and Cooperation. She became an MP in 1994 and has amassed impressive experience in positions of public office, including deputy chief whip of the ANC in the National Assembly from 1995 to 1998, deputy chairperson of the National Council of Provinces in 1998, and its Chairperson from 1999-2004. Her experience in education policy planning made her a welcome appointment as South Africa's Minister of Education in 2004. She has been a member of cabinet ever since, serving as Minister of Education (2004-2009), Minister of Science and Technology (2009-2012), Minister of Home Affairs (2012-2014), Minister of Science and Technology (2014-2018); Minister of Higher Education and Training (2018-19). Pandor has a PhD from the University of Pretoria (2019) and she holds honorary doctorates from the Cape Peninsula University of Technology, Stellenbosch University, University of Lisbon (Portugal) and the University College Dublin in Ireland. She was awarded Germany's highest federal award, namely the Grand Cross of Merit, the German Ambassador to South Africa,

Retno L.P. Marsudi

The first female career diplomat to hold the position of Foreign Minister of Indonesia. She was appointed for the first time by President Joko Widodo in 2014 (2014-2019) and was re-appointed for a second term in October 2019 (2019-2024). Minister Marsudi joined the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in 1986. Being a career diplomat, she has served in various posts and was the Indonesian Ambassador to the Kingdom of Norway (2005-2008) and the Netherlands (2012-2014). Minister Marsudi has also received many awards and honors both nationally and internationally.

Salman Al Farisi

He is a career diplomat and the current Ambassador of the Republic of Indonesia to the Republic of South Africa. He was formerly the Indonesian Ambassador to the United Arab Emirates and Senior Advisor to the Minister of Foreign Affairs for Institutional Relations within the Indonesian Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Shafiq Morton

He is a well-known Cape Town photojournalist and author who has over three decades of experience as a multi-media journalist. He is currently a Voice of the Cape (VOC) radio host and TV presenter. On his show, radio VOC Drivetime show, he has interviewed thousands of guests from over 100 countries. During 2008, he received the Vodacom community journalist of the year award. In 2014, Morton's programme was nominated as finalist in the national MTN Awards and in 2017 in the Liberty Life Awards. In addition to Morton's journalistic career, he authored: a travelogue titled Notebooks from Makkah and Madinah (2006). Surfing behind the Wall, My Palestinian Journey (2012), Imtiaz Sooliman & the Gift of the Givers A Mercy to All (2014), and From the Spice Islands to Cape Town: the Life and Times of Tuan

Guru', a famous 18th century political exile sent to the Cape by the Dutch (2019). Morton is busy with his forthcoming novel titled The Chronicles of Ayman O'Neill, the Accidental Sufi. Besides these, he completed A Mercy to All (second edition) and he is about to finish the biography of Shaykh Abu Bakr Effendi, an Ottoman Scholar at the Cape.

Suleman Essop Dangor

He is Emeritus Professor at the University of KwaZulu-Natal from where he obtained a PhD in Islamic Studies. He also holds a Higher Diploma in Arabic from the University of Riyadh's Arabic Language Institute. He taught modules on Islam and interfaith modules for more than thirty years during which he also supervised many post-graduate students. Before retirement, he was a member of several academic associations. Besides Prof. Dangor's UKZN position, he also served as Commissioner for the Commission for the Promotion & Protection of the Rights of Cultural, Religious & Linguistic Communities (circa 2004-2008) and as member of the 'Religious Broadcasting Panel, South African Broadcasting Corporation (SABC) – 1995-2005. He authored/edited 9 books and around 80 chapters/journal articles with a focus on Islam/Muslims in South Africa. Whilst his research covered a variety of themes that included history, education, politics, language, and law, he also translated into English a few works from Arabic. He translated six of Shaykh Yusuf's Arabic manuscripts on tasawwuf that appeared in UNISA's 2019 Spiritual Path, Spiritual Reality – Selected writings of Shaykh Yusuf of Macassar (Eds. Yousuf Dadoo and Auwais Rafudeen). Apart from these translations, he co-edited the following texts: The Afrikaans of the Cape Muslims from 1815 to 1915 (with Hein Willemsse) (2011) and Muslim Personal Law in South Africa: Evolution and Future Prospects, Juta and Company (with Najma Moosa) (2019). Prior to this, he revised his popular text on Shaykh Yusuf (1994; 2014).

Yousuf Dadoo

He is hafiz al-Qur'an (memorizer of the Qur'an), and he is presently Emeritus Professor at the University of South Africa (Unisa). He taught and headed UNISA's 'Arabic and Islamic Studies' for 29 years. He completed undergraduate and postgraduate studies at the University of Durban-Westville (UDW) and the UNISA. Along with an MA and a PhD, he completed three non-degree certificates: Theory of Literature (UNISA), Basic Conversational Egyptian Arabic (AUC), and Basic Conversational Farsi (Terbiyyat Mudarres University, Tehran). In Prof. Dadoo's capacity as professor, he successfully supervised 27 Masters and 20 Doctorates. He also presented papers at 69 local and international academic conferences; and he has a total of 60 local and international academic publications. Co-edited Arabic Rhetoric (forthcoming) as well as Spiritual Path, Spiritual Reality: Selected Writing of Shaykh Yusuf of Macassar (2020). The latter work forms part of a Shaykh Yusuf Project of which he is a key member.

Embassy of The Republic of Indonesia
Pretoria 2021