Title : The Adaptation of The Hate You Give Novel by Angie Thomas into Film by George Tillman Consultant I : Dr.Nasrum, S.Pd., M.A.
Consultant II : Ahmad, S.S., M.Litt.

This research discusses the adaptation of The Hate You Give Novel by Angie Thomas into Film by George Tillman. The objectives of this research aimed to find out the motivations of adaptor in adapting that novel into film.

This research used descriptive qualitative method using Linda Hutcheon's theory of the motivations of adaptor in adapting that novel into film. The data taken from adaptor in adapting that novel into film by using note taking to record and classify data related to objects as the research instrument.

The findings of the research shows that four motivations of adaptor in adapting that novel into film they are the economic, the legal constrains, cultural capital and the personal reasons. It can be concluded that the first, the economic professional actors who made successful film and could elevate this film into a popular adaptation and the profits made in adapting the film could reach a worldwide box office gross. The second, legal constraints adaptor is warned not to copy Angie Thomas' work without permission, as they have their own rules. The third, cultural capital black people have a way of dressing that is identical to them and a way of speaking English which is declared as slang, but the culture of black people speaking slang and dressing like black people. The last, personal reasons for being interested in adapting the film based on the relationship between the Starr in the novel and the real life experience of the adaptor.

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

A. Background of Study

The world of Indonesian is now starting to be enlivened with films whose stories are adapted from literary works. As in the Qur'an Surah Az-Zukhruf verse 1-3, Allah SWT said:

حَمِّ ۝ وَالْكِتَابِ الْمُبِينِ ۝ إِنَّا جَعَلْنَاهُ قُرْءَانًا عَرَبِيًّا لَّعَلَّكُمْ
تَعْقِلُونَ ۝

Translation:

(1) Ha, Meem, (2) By the clear Book, (3) Indeed, We have made it an Arabic Qur'an that you might understand.

This verse talks about Allah SWT sent down the glorious Al-Qur'an in clear Arabic so that we can use the potential of reason perfectly. Bring up the knowledge of Arabic literature and linguistics. Knowledge of language began to be systematized since the focus on the study of the Qur'an began to be glorified. Systematized knowledge of language is deemed necessary to make it easier to deepen the study of the Qur'an. (Tafsir Ibnu Katsir, 2015)

Basen on the verse above, changes in literary works from ancient times to the present are very different. The development of literature does not only occur in the realm of poetry, but also in prose, drama, film, plays and others. Treatises or correspondence and sermons or rhetoric experienced rapid development in the Islamic period, because both have an important role in spreading the teachings of Islam to all corners of the world. Likewise with novel work adapted into film form.

In adaptation theory, novel, film, as well as poems, drama and other types of literary works can be analyzed. Hutcheon (2006: XI) said that “stories of poetry, dances, tableaux vivant, songs, paintings, plays, and novels are constantly being adapted from one form to another and then retold in a new medium”.

Novel and film are very different species, novel is a complete art forms one author writes a book, and the reader recognizes and identifies the characters through the text; what they feel, what they say, and anything else that is verbal. In contrast to film where the audience can see the expressions, gestures, and expressions of characters in implicit forms. Some works of art are the result of a process of adaptation, for example: Film Mortal Engines (Peter Jackson, 2018) is the adaptation from the novel Mortal Engines (Philip Reeve, 2001), film The Aftermath (James Kent, 2019) is the adaptation from the novel The Aftermath (Rhidian Brook, 2013), film The Boy Harness The Wind (Chiwetel Ejiofor, 2019) is the adaptation from the novel The Boy Harness The Wind (William Kamkwamba, 2010) and film Five Feet Apart (Justin Baldoni, 2019) is the adaptation from the novel Five Feet Apart (Rachael Lippincott, 2018).

Adapting a novel for a film is about staying true to the source as you continue to bend it into the film medium. Furthermore, Holland (2002: 2) said that “the novel is an old form and therefore, authoritative book is strong”. Although the novel and film differ in their mediums, the story's central points are almost identical. After the adaptation, the only thing they will share is the story, setting, and characters. Two types of adaptation: as a product and as a process that the writer creates a product after going through a manner. Kinney (2013:8) said that “product adaptation cannot be completely faithful to the original text on the contrary, the question of plagiarism arises”. So, the adaptation must be sufficiently different from it while still retaining the basic ideas of the source.

The process of adaptation becomes an act of taking and preserving when trying to give a new meaning to the text. The filmmaker who adapts a text into a film clearly establishes the process of filmmaking. The new adapter provides a rationale for the meaning of the original text. Kermode in Bennett and Nicholas (2004: 240) of their essay entitled, “Secrets and Narrative Sequences”, explained that to read a novel awaiting the satisfaction of its final closure is enough to experience its full, satisfying story; this technique is easier to use because it is similar to how we usually communicate.

The film The Hate You Give directed by George Tillman Jr adaptasi of the best selling novel in America by Angie Thomas with that same title. This film takes setting in America's Garden Heights area. The Hate You Give is definitely a masterpiece novel that evokes feelings and is relevant to reality. This is a story about love and hope that makes us realize the importance of respecting differences. That unfounded prejudice can cause ripples of hatred that harm others. That everyone, regardless of their skin color, has the right to freedom, justice and complete equality in any way necessary. Once Starr Carter watched shooting of a childhood friend his little one named Khalil Harris in hand a skinned police officer white when they were driving toward home. An unequal gap between the two world namely white people and black people suddenly destroyed when the incident the shooting happened. As long as Starr is inside a period of grief at the death of Khalil, Starr have to set himself whether to stay silence as the only witness inside incident or he will expose himself as a knowing witness true incident.

The Hate You Give story tell about Sixteen-year-old Starr Carter must live in two different worlds. Garden Height The poor neighborhood where she was born and raised and her large free school, Williamson lives in the city. Black people have been very difficult for her because she has to be two different people in two different places. Her difficult life became more difficult when the police got involved in the murder of her best friend Khalil who had no soldiers. The media became a national issue and received a lot of attention, especially when people found out that Khalil was black and unarmed when the police shot him. Starr was more concerned about Khalil's past than that he was killed by the police, so he had to endure witnessing the violence against Khalil suffering in the community. When the news speaks of Khalil as a gangster and drug dealer, it is better to explain the white policeman who killed him. Justice is still trying to find Khalil's mistake and convict the police. (Collective, 2018)

The researcher wants to know the motivation for adapting the novel into a film and uses Linda Hutcheon's adaptation theory as an approach in literary analysis.

A. Research Questions

Based on the preceding background the researcher need to answer the following question:

What are the motivations of adaptor in adapting that novel into film?

B. Objective of The Research

This study is mainly aimed to achieve the following objective

1. To know what are the motivations of adaptor in adapting that novel into film

C. Significances of The Research

1. Theoretically, the researcher hope, that this research can provide information about adaptation theory, novel and how it is applied in film script.
2. Practically, the researcher hope, this research can be a reference for students, readers, or other researchers from the Department of English Language and Literature, especially for the same research.

D. Scope of The Research

In this study, the researcher wanted to identify the motivations of the adaptor in adapting that novel into a film and used Hutcheon's theory.

CHAPTER II

REVIEW OF RELATED LITERATURE

There are two parts of this chapter; previous findings and pertinent ideas:

A. Previous Findings

There are four previous studies that have correlated the adaptation of a novel into a film:

Robing (2017), in his thesis: adaptation of the novel "Datu Maseng & Maipo Deapati" by Verdy R Baso into The Drama "An Endless Love of Datu Museng & Maipa Deapati" by BSI in 2015 (Structural Approach). The paper argues that adapting a novel into a drama can be done using adaptation theory and the Structural Approach. This study used a descriptive qualitative analysis method. The data shows that there are many different aspects to a character, plot, setting, point of view, tone, theme, figurative language, and moral value. His thesis provides more information about how adaptations of novel into dramas can be successful.

Habrnalova (2016), in her paper: "Literary Works by Hanif Kureishi and Their film adaptations". She described some of the key benefits of adaptation theory. After trying to apply Linda Hutcheon's she finds out that there are distinct differences between telling and showing modes of engagement. There are literary works in her paper; My Beautiful Laundrette and The Buddha of Suburbia.

Anushiravani and Elinezhadi (2016), in their paper: "An Analytical study of 2013 Cinematic adaptation of The Great Gatsby". They found Linda Hutcheon's theory; what, who, and why, how, when, and where. Adaptation and consist are comparative literary terms that are used to describe the ways in which different texts adapt or consist of similar elements. Cinema and literature are two different forms of art that use different means of expression, namely words on a page and images on a screen. They learn about the similarities and differences between a novel and film by doing this research.

Kayyis (2016), in his thesis: Comparison between Novel and Film "Divergent" and used Ecranisation theory. His thesis discussed how the Ecranisation process of a novel into a film "Devergent" works. He identified the essential elements of both novel and film. This study focused on reductions, additions, and changes based on Eneste's Ecranisation theory. He found that modification, addition, and reduction were a transformation of novel into film, and he used a qualitative descriptive method in his thesis.

The previous findings above suggest that there are some similarities and differences between this research. Habrnalova used adaptation theory and Linda Hutcheon theory methods to explore similarities. While her paper different analyzes the telling and the showing mode of engagement with literary works by Hanif Kureishi in their film adaptation. Anushiravani and Elinezhadi in their paper used linda hutcheon theory to explore similarities. However, the difference in their paper in cinema adaptation and consist comparative literature of expression, namely words on a page and images on a screen. Kayyis used a descriptive qualitative method to compare the similarities in thesis and she used a novel and film as a medium. However, the difference in his dissertation used Eneste's theory of Ecranisation to analyze some of the unique elements of the novel into the film. Robing's thesis used adaptation theory and descriptive qualitative methods to explore similarities. While his thesis different analyzes all elements of the novel and drama (structural approach), and the novel into drama as his medium.

B. Pertinent Ideas

1. The Motives of Adaptation

Adaptation theory by Linda Hutcheon is one of some theories can be used analysis literary works like novel, film, theatre and others. Hutcheon's theory is the comparative literature that tries to analysis one medium to another and back again. In addition, Hutcheon discusses several things related to adapting novel into film. These include the process of adapting a novel, the importance of accuracy in adaptation, and the difficulties that can arise when adapting a novel. The main reason for the decision is as follows:

1) The Economy

The adaptor should consider who the audience is (for whom?), Structure of economy: film world-big money=big star, big directors-the screenwriter. In order to create content that is appropriate for them. The structure of the film industry is based upon the fact that the big money is concentrated in the world of big stars and big directors. The screenwriter is the person who largely depends on this system in order to make a living. Expensive forms associated with adaptor teamwork such as opera or film will look for equivalent works such as best-selling novels that already have an existing audience, with which the next task is to broaden the audience. Most importantly they will make a lot of money selling their adaptation. Hutcheon (2006) said that monetary attractiveness cannot be ignored. Adopting adaptations of films can be profitable.

When adaptation attracts economics as a motive, adaptors want to adapt a work because they want the benefits of their adapted work. The advantage here means that they can earn a lot of money from their adaptation work. Profits come from franchising adapted works. In addition, adaptation theory says that popular writers will make a lot of money for their work and then a lot of money makes adaptors want to profit from famous writers. Adaptation is one of the attractions in work besides aesthetics, namely economic goals. The economic advantage is the franchise that each adapter acquires and has a large number of markets. Hutcheon (2006: 86) said that “the monetary attraction cannot be ignored there may be some other attraction”. Selling film adaptations, adaptors can make a lot of profit.

2) The Legal Constraints

Some interest's point in the legal constraints of adaptor to make interpretation; raider, spawned, control, by-product, great similarity, and re-function. Hutcheon (2006 : 90) said that adaptor is used in film to change the reason for adaptation. This can be determined by selecting an artist who has a major influence in a film, such as the film's director, star, or artist.

3) Cultural Capital

People use adaptation methods, products, and other means to gain cultural capital, which is a motivation to share something like cultural prestige or cultural accreditation. The purpose of this project is to change the cultural level. Hutcheon, (2006:91) argues that adaptations will be more mobile and more respected if adaptors are given the credit they truly deserve. This will benefit adaptation and other means of promoting a particular culture through literature. This minute's cues talk about the adaptor wanting to elevate the status of a particular culture.

4) Personal and Political Reasons

Every adaptor has their own reasons for adapting in a particular medium, and these reasons may be influenced by their political beliefs. This motive also includes the reasons why the adaptor might decide to adapt work and then choose the adapted mediums (Hutcheon, 2006: 92). They not only interpret the work, but also take a certain position in it. The keywords of this motif suggest that the adaptor (which determines the work and media adapted) has a significant impact on the adaptation experience.

2. Biography of George Tillman

George Tillman Jr. is an American Producer, Director, Writer, and Screenwriter. 53 years old (January 26, 1969) born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, United States. So far George Tillman Jr. has worked in the Hollywood entertainment industry and her art has been released in English language films directed the Movies Soul Food (1997) and Men of Honor (2000). He is also the producer of the television series Soul Food: and three films in the Barbershop series: Barbershop, Barbershop 2: Back in the Market and the Beauty Store. He also fronted Notorious, a 2009 biopic about Brooklyn-born rapper The Notorious B.I.G. Tillman was nominated for Best Director at the 1997 Black Film Awards for Soul Food. Tillman was also nominated for the Black Reel Award for Best Director and Best Performance for Notorious (2009). Soul Food (1997) and Men of Honor (2000). He is also the producer of the television series Soul Food: and three films in the Barbershop series: Barbershop, Barbershop 2: Back in the Market and the Beauty Store. He also fronted Notorious, a 2009 biopic about Brooklyn-born rapper The Notorious B.I.G. Tillman was nominated for Best Director at the 1997 Black Film Awards for Soul Food. Tillman was also nominated for the Black Reel Award for Best Director and Best Performance for Notorious (2009). (Scripts, 2010)

RESEARCH METHODOLOGY

There are five parts of this chapter; Research Method, Source of Data, Research Instrument, Procedure of Data Analysis, and Technique of Data Analysis.

A. Research Method

This researcher used descriptive qualitative method. The descriptive qualitative technique is a way of describing data within the form of spoken or words written about actors or the people in a novel, to can be observed (Glass & Hopkins in Dahlia, 2015: 15).

B. Source of Data

The researcher used the data in this research are primary data and secondary data. The primary data to conduct this study read the novel, "The Hate You Give" by Angie Thomas and then watch a film by George Tillman. The novel was released in 2017 and the film was produced in 2018. The novel has 26 chapters and 437 pages and screenplay pages through 2:13:05 second duration of film The Hate You Give. The Secondary data from an article by Reza Reinaldo, Studycorgi.com, and Robert Goldrich, Aramide A.Tinubu, Journal by Ririn Aprilia, YouTube by Interview Blactreetv, La Luna in Endor about the production process of the film can provide interesting insights.

C. Research Instruments

The researcher used note taking during the study in order to document their findings. Makany in Raping (2008: 36) stated that Note-taking is the practice of recording facts taken from another source. This instrument is used to record and classify data related to objects of research. The researcher has written a note from the source of the data used in their study from the novel and film The Hate You Give.

D. Procedure of Data Collection

The researcher applies several procedures as follows:

1. The researcher read the novel, watched the film, and looked for data related to the production of the film "The Hate You Give"
2. The researcher read all the data collected to find elements of elements of economic, legal, cultural, and personal.
3. The researcher identified motivation data through You-Tube, articles, and journal, they are:

a. Articles: Aramide A.Tinubu (2018), Reza Reinaldo (2021), Studycorgi (2022), Robert Goldrich (2018), and script novel (2017)

b. You-Tube: Blactreetv (2018) "Interview Angie Thomas allowed George Tillman to adapt her novel The Hate You Give into film", La Luna in Endor (2018) "Press Conference George Tillman"

- c. Journal: Ririn Aprilia (2020) “Cultural Adaptation in the Film The Hate You Give”

E. Technique of Data Analysis

The researcher used adaptation theory of Linda Hutcheon (2006). In analysing the data does some steps: identifying the motivations aspect especially the economic, legal constraints, cultural capital and personal reasons.

CHAPTER IV

FINDINGS AND DISCUSSIONS

The researcher would present all the data that have been found in novel and film The Hate You Give. findings and discussions the data which related adaptation theory.

A. Findings

In this research to answer the question what are the motivations of adaptor in adapting that novel into film. The motives are economic, legal constraints, cultural capital and personal reasons. The research finds several data which categories into some motives, as follows:

1. The Economic

The adaptor motivation for wanting to adapt a novel into a film can be seen from the economic side because adapting a novel into a film is an adaptation work that has new ideas and stories as well as the selection of different actors, the adaptor has its own rights in making ideas to tell the same general story. They have things that can support the success of a work they make this can support success and the economy. Now the prolific filmmaker is bringing Angie Thomas' stunning novel The Hate You Give to the big screen. The narrative centers around black teenager Starr Carter, and his experiences participating in activism that parallels the Black Lives Matter movement.

The data taken from an article by Aramide A. Tinubu, posted on October 19th 2018 from shadowandact.

Extract 1

“As I read on the dialogue and language reminded me of a party. I attended years ago in my high school days, and there was a shooting,” recalls Tillman. “The way (Angie) got it and the theme. I was so blown away. I must call him immediately. We're talking maybe two weeks after that. We discussed how I saw the film, the important characters the sound of the theme. We really connected. Then I can sell it to Fox at that point.”(P1.L5)

Analysis Context:

Tillman read a novel that began at a party where Starr was hanging out. Starr felt uncomfortable, and at the time tillman was shocked when he had read the first chapter of the novel because he had never seen a story about a 16-year-old African-American girl dealing with issues of identity. After that Tillman felt that the characters in the novel were very connected with his past when he was in high school and then he was interested in adapting the novel into a film. According to Tillman, this novel will be very interesting to be adapted into a film because it relates to Americans and Africans, from the past until now there are still differences in skin color, and this is what will make this film adaptation popular, the audience will not be bored when this film adaptation is successful played later for a profit he could sell it as an adaptation.

Extract 2

“It was instinctive,” says Tillman “Amandla (Stenberg) was reading the book at the same time I was. He and I felt this was something we could partner up with. When I met him, I felt he was the one. I never looked at anyone else for the role, because it's like at the age of 19 reading a book that wasn't self-published, how many other actresses or actors are looking for their own material at that age? Tillman also felt Stenberg could personally relate to the role. (P2.L1)

Analysis Context:

One of the things that Tillman had to do in order for his film adaptation to be successful in all circles, especially among African Americans was to choose a professional main actor who could truly feel and understand the characters in the novel, whom Tillman could trust for the success of his adaptation work. Acting while playing this character and when tillman met Amandla Stenberg, he felt that Amandla could portray the character in the novel well and with feeling.

Extract 3

“He grew up in Inglewood, and he went to white private schools and dealt with these issues of identity,” says Tillman. “She's already an activist and she's already a talented actress. I felt that his greatest work was yet to come, so he became my partner from the start.” (P2.L8)

Analysis Context:

The community of people around Starr, particularly his parents Mav and Lisa Carter, is an important component of Tillman's vision. For this character, he called veteran actors Russell Hornsby and Regina Hall. Tillman feels both are talented actresses and have successfully played many works.

Extract 4

“He actually auditioned for Notorious. He auditioned for Lil' Kim. My wife had me save all my auditions through the years. (Regina's) audition for Kim was amazing, but I went in a different direction. I always looked at him like, 'Damn, that audition was awesome,’” Tillman said. (P3.L4)

Analysis Context:

Tillman saw it in a short film years ago. Ruselle always does a great job. Every time Tillman saw him, he was very committed. Then Tillman always wanted to work with Ruselle, because he found his very flexible. Then he believes that Ruselle is able to play his role well because he is a talented actor and has been successful in various works he has starred in. The Hate You Give novel will be adapted into a film as Tillman is passionately connected to his personal past.

Extract 5

“I saw (Algee Smith) in The New Edition Story. He's like Ralph (Tresvant) in that respect. So I was like, 'This guy is great!’” recalls Tillman. “Her agent kept calling me and saying, 'Just give her the role.' I was like, 'No, Algee has to come here because he needs to read.' He came in and he was the guy, he was so charismatic. Then Amandla saw her audition, and she started to smile. I've never even put them in a room together, because I just know they already have it together.” (P4.L2)

Analysis Context:

When he wanted to play a role, Tillman would not directly give him a role but he had to read the novel he was going to play so that he could feel it and can be successful in getting the audience interested in watching a film that would be adapted from a novel. And after Tillman saw Algee Smith reading his novel, he saw and felt that Algee was perfect for the role because he was so charismatic. Then be able to build a good chemistry with co-stars.

Extract 6

"It was all very instinctive," Tillman said of the actor's creative chemistry and Stenberg's portrayal of Starr, in particular. "There are many different people who bring different elements. I feel like we got the right cast." "Fox never once said, 'You have to go out and get the biggest actor.' It's all about what's right for the role. I think the success of the book helped us in that regard." (P5.L6)

Analysis Context:

The difficulty of working on one project is that it takes a lot of energy and time to adapt and align yourself so that you can work with all the actors. With the differences in existing characters, clashes often occur, even for trivial matters which, if examined further, actually do not need to be a problem. Each person's different character can arise from environmental factors. The environment in which everyone grows and develops plays an important role in one's character. Under certain conditions, sometimes we cannot choose the environment in which we grow, due to various limitations and several other reasons. That's why we can't just blame people because of their character. You have to be more observant to see that you are more objective when judging others. Furthermore, Tillman felt that he had found the right player. When the actors involve their feelings when playing their roles chemistry will be easy to get and the project can work well.

The affect Economic Motives As seen in an article review by Reza Reinaldo, posted on 09 July 2021 from Jurnalmahasiswa.Unesa.Ac.Id. He asserts that The Hate You Give is an American film based on the modern novel of the same name. The film is a teen racism drama genre directed by George Tillman Jr. The film premiered at the 2018 Toronto International Film Festival on 07 September 2018. After that, the film was only released to the public on 05 October 2018 grossing $29.7 million in the United States and Canada, and $5.2 million in other territories with a total worldwide gross of $34.9 million, against a production budget of $23 million. In its limited opening weekend, the film earned $512,035 from 36 theaters, averaging $14,233 per venue, placing 13th. Screened in a total of 248 theaters the following weekend, the film grossed $1.8 million, placing ninth. The film is projected to earn $7–9 million when it expands to 2,303 theaters on 19 October. The film earned $2.5 million on its first day of wide release, including $300,000 from Thursday night preview. It made $7.5 million over the weekend, placing sixth at the box office.

The profits made in adapting the film, The Hate You Give could reach a worldwide box office gross of $34 million on a budget of $23 million and is in the category of the highest grossing film. This can be seen from its release on the first day then improved when it was expanded to 2,303 theaters. This makes no doubt for the adaptor to make film and invest a lot of money. In addition to the benefits obtained, the supplier also produces a literary work. With that, they'll also be looking for ways to expand their "franchise" audience so they can cover losses. of course as we know that adaptation is not only individual work, but group work that has motives. An adaptation can also clearly be used to engage in the larger society. This is a very big advantage for the adaptor to adapt because he will see the results achieved.

2. The Legal Constraints

There are George Tillman and Angie Thomas Interview which provide opinions or facts about the legal process about The Hate You Give film. George Tillman had a hard time contacting Angie Thomas as the writer of the novel he wanted to adapt into a film but he kept trying to call Angie and her collaborators until he got Angie Thomas permission.

The data taken from an interview from BlacktreeTV YouTube, Angie Thomas allowed George Tillman to adapt her novel The Hate You Give into a film.

Extract 7

“Sometimes with adaptation, it's like the author, okay, we get a book, thank you. Whereas George is not like that but I get direct calls from George every week even in post production, that's how he wants me to be involved, making me believe in George Tillman as an adaptor from my novel entitled The Hate You Give so it's been a collaboration from the start. He respects the source material and that means a lot to me.”

Analysis Context:

This is why the contract seeks to relieve the publisher or studio from any legal consequences of an adaptation. This is related to the permission issue, everyone is allowed to change something original, but only they must have permission from the previous work or the original. Like Angie has entrusted George Tillman to direct the film The Hate You Give and always communicates whenever there is a change or variation that George Tillman wants to do in the making of the film.

3. Cultural Capital

The adaptor motivation is to adapt the novel to film from a cultural capital perspective because adapting the film The Hate You Give also aims to enhance or promote the cultural values that exist in the story. Many people think that adapting a film can increase cultural capital. Adaptation can be one way to promote the culture that you want to be raised in a film or other literary work.

Extract 8

First page, (main character) Starr is at a party. I said, "This reminds me of a party I attended in the 80s in high school." It's a house party. An inner-city neighborhood in Milwaukee, it was dark, and everyone was having fun. And then pow, pow! This shooting happened and everyone started running. As I continued to read it became police brutality. It gets into a very specific cultural thing. It identifies who you are as a black individual living in two different worlds. I had to speak to Angie Thomas right away before this book was published. I'm so excited to direct this film. This is some evidenced or affect of motivation by review about the success of the film adaptation of The Hate You Give. (P6.L3)

Analysis Context:

The events that occur in the novel that Tillman will adapt into the film are very much connected to what he experienced in his past, which reminds him of the party that happened in his house and also the environment at his school which his mother moved to Milwaukee. There is a big difference between black and white skin color. Culturally each ethnic group has a deep worship of its ethnic group identity, so it tends to prejudice and discriminate against different racial groups. All those surveyed were asked their thoughts on an indication of how much black, or white, people have been victims of discrimination in the United States over the decades. Thus, Tillman was very interested in Angie Thomas's novel to be adapted into a film.

The first review of the journal "Cultural Adaptation in the film The Hate You Give", posted on 08 February 2020 by Ririn Aprilia from Jurnalmahasiswa.Unesa.Ac.Id. The story of "The Hate You Give" depicting Culture has been revealed in a big way in film as the forerunner of stereotypes by law enforcement. Black people have a way of dressing that is identical to them and a way of speaking English which is expressed as slang, but the culture of black people to speak slang and dress like black people. Starr complained that their culture had been robbed by the white community. Aprilia stated that “experiencing racial discrimination for a long time can make the oppressed justify acts of oppression”. Black culture is revealed through their singing style, speaking slang, and black fashion elevating white perceptions and injustices. White Americans have always been underdogs, and even when they followed black American culture, it was considered cool.

The second review of the article “Culture in The Hate You Give film” on 30 July 2022 from studycorgi.com explains about the dimensions of culture manifested in two different ways: Standards and Frames of reality. Eurocentric standardization has been demonstrated by the oppressed groups in terms of acceptance of negative stereotypes and prejudice, on the other hand, frame reality shows an error in recognizing the roots of racial problems. The culture popularized in the film The Hate You Give is American culture which has a storyline for black teenagers who are oppressed. The adaptor is intended to elevate the culture shown in the film The Hate You Give according to the novel version.

The data taken from script novel Angie Thomas Publication Date February 28th 2017

Extract 9

"This isn't about black or white, "he says

"Bullshit," says Daddy. “If this was out in Riverton Hills and his name was Richie, we wouldn't be having this conversation.”

"I heard he was a drug dealer,” says Uncle Carlos. (Thomas: P.54)

Analysis Context:

The cultural dimension was experienced differently by Uncle Carlos. A black man and former resident of Garden Heights, he now lives in Riverton Hills where the majority of the white upper class live. As a cop who happens to know the officer Brian Cruise who killed Khalil, Uncle Carlos automatically stands up for his fellow law enforcement officers. His general belief that black people, especially black men in Garden Heights was dangerous, was strengthened when he suspected Khalil of dealing drugs. Moreover, Carlos is not new to the practice of racial profiling; whereas in their work, police officers are expected to be careful in committing criminal acts. As Maverick points out to Carlos' racial bias, he emphasizes that if the incident had happened in a white neighborhood, the police wouldn't have shot the perpetrator because he was white and Carlos knew it was true. Instead, he changed the subject to defend Khalil's guilt for its correlation to drug trafficking. At this point, Carlos demonstrates the deceived perpetrator persona: Carlos may argue that he has racist tendencies by incorporating Brian's ethnicity (White) and Khalil's social status (drug dealer) to rationalize, but he fails to see that, he is contributing to the oppressive system by doing so. Carlos' actions "show that he internalizes negative stereotypes and prejudices of black people.

4. Personal Reasons

This motive is the reasons the adaptor decides to adapt. There are article that tell about George Tillman's personal motives for being interested in adapting the film The Hate You Give.

The data taken from an article posted on 13 December 2018 by Robert Goldrich from Shootonline.com based on press conference George Tillman on 05 November 2018 from YouTube la luna in Endor.

Extract 10

Tillman said that, the Story first appeared in manuscript form when I was working on Luke Cage for Marvel. I was captivated when I read the first chapter. Starr's story moved me, it's a story I've never seen told like that before the idea of this character trying to find his identity, having to do code switching to fit his school environment. The shooting by a white cop opened up a lot of conversations, issues in society, and questions this girl asked from an innocent place. I love the story and the possibility of telling it from a dramatic and visual point of view. Usually for stories like this, you do research, read other materials, seen other film. I didn't do that much for this film. Many come out instinctively. I grew up as a young person in Milwaukee, like many cities in the Midwest, it is very separate. I live on the north side all I see are African Americans, no white people. I have always felt that relations with police officers in the community were a problem. At an early age, my parents transferred me to a white public school from a predominantly African-American school. I could feel what it was like to be in the white community, how education was viewed there, how funds were spent. The world is completely different. The idea, the design palette, the sound and the look of the film came to me. It was instinctive based on my experience as a young African-American Male, it even extended to my filmmaking education. As a director who went to film school at Columbia College in Chicago, I was one of only three African Americans to study film.

Analysis Context:

George Tillman is interested in a film adaptation of The Hate You Give. The story experienced by the main character in the novel is closely related to Tillman's life experience. The film shows many people of color having to go through and deal with society. It brings emotion to the viewer in a way that helps you understand a bit how those who have experienced this problem. It is also a film that shows how society's beliefs and opinions about people of color influence how they are presented on screen through their editing and cinematography. The Hate You Give shows through different film elements. The differences in power and issues of discrimination that are presented both in reality and in film serve as a reminder for all people to respect one another.

B. Discussion

This research discussed the analysis of the data found in novel and film adaptation. In the process of adaptation showed some motivations of the adaptor which are, economic, legal constraints, cultural capital and personal reasons.

The first, this study found that data about economic was not uncommon to find in a film adapted from novel. Apart from that, the content of the story was familiar and was able to give a picture of the target market in film production. So, the adaptation provided benefits in addition to shortening the time. After 20th Century Fox gave Tillman the green light, his next milestone was building the cast. He already had a clear vision of what he wanted in his head. Then Tillman can sell it to Fox at that point.” They were well known and professional actors who made The Hate You Give a success and were able to make this film a popular adaptation. All the cast characters that support the economic success that the adaptor got from adapting the film The Hate You Give, can be seen from the results of George Tillman's interviews in the selection of popular actors who aired produced some success film. The film adaptation that aired here were some proofs or motivational influences by reviewing the success of the film adaptation of The Hate You Give. The achievement of The Hate You Give was so fantastic because after its release, this film immediately broke the world record and got the title of the best film of all time it was proven, that the attention of George Tillman's in making this fictional film bewitched all audiences. Moreover, popular artists can be one of the big budget makers.

The second, this study found data about legal constraints were taken into consideration by producers and directors in the film industry so that, among other things, they can market their products to a wide audience laws, on the other hand, must be obeyed by production companies to avoid possible penalties like others. Legal constraints are seen as a barrier to production in the film industry. George Tillman, new adaptor was warned not to copy Angie Thomas' work without permission, as they have their own rules. George Tillman as the director of The Hate You Give was not afraid to postpone the film because Angie Thomas did entrust George Tillman to directed the film

The Hate You Give. Finally Tillman as the director was free to adapt Angie Thomas's novel because he has received permission from the writer novel and any changes made were always confirmed by Angie Thomas.

The third, this study found data about adapting the novel into film from the perspective of cultural capital. This as the result that adapting the film The Hate You Give was able to enhance or promote the cultural values that exist in the story. Race and ethnicity were very prevalent in the American justice system today, and were more common among black Americans and other racially diverse individuals. This film was well adapted to the current situation because it raised the theme of racial, social and cultural issues that need to be eradicated by society. The film The Hate You Give revealed the problems of society, specifically how society can be cruel even when someone wanted to change their ways and correct the wrongs they have done. Maverick's decision to stay away from crime sparks a fight after deciding to leave his gang due to having children. As a result, he was imprisoned for a crime he never committed then, he was allowed to leave the gang. After three years, he found it difficult to reintegrate into society and contrary to expectations that he was a reformed person. He rejoined society with a lot of constraints, which served as a perfect example of how disgusting and judgmental society can be on ex-convicts. Racial progress in America has been revealed in the film to be somber. Many black communities believed that slavery continued to undermine their rights and, moreover, undermine their position. Maverick spoke to Starr about the opportunities and resources that black people are denied, which continue to trap black people in shackles of poverty. Furthermore, this film revealed how poverty has been racialized so that many black communities were forced to sell drugs in order to eradicate poverty, and as a result they were hated for it. Starr's dilemma of exploring their black world and their temporal white world at Williamson Prep testifies to that fact.

The last, this study found data about the personal reasons Angie worked well. There was the Part of scene where Maverick played by Russell Hornsby appeared with braids and tattoos. He was running with the gang, but he was doing something completely different than anyone could imagine or have seen in movies before. That was what actually broke down some of these stereotypes. Even King, played by Anthony Mackie, he was a gang member in the neighborhood, but he has a daughter and he protected her. He was like an odd surrogate uncle to Star until the idea of snitching hit the community. Those all what was discussed about how did we stay true to what we've seen and what we know in our own communities. We are all human and all the things that happen. There is a hope factor that is still behind the family dynamics. The family still has hope. And that's what happened as an African American, no matter how hard things got to keep pushing.

It was so complicated, and it really got to the scene. It was a very interesting and complicated scene because not only Khalil protected Star at in the party but he explained Tupac's analogy and he accepted it. Then other people just see these two individuals, they were talking about adult issues about Tupac and his philosophy. But then, they just became kids right away and were talking about Harry Potter and their childhood friendship they had. Then they were pulled over by the police. This was the kind of daily activity, as individuals living in a community we have to deal with a lot of things. That was something inspired Tillman as a director through the experiences he had in the past. Because of that, Tillman felt that his past life was very much connected to the story of the novel that would be adapted into a film.

The results of this study are different from previous research conducted by Robing (2017): "adaptation of the novel "Datu Maseng & Maipo Deapati" by Verdy R Baso into the Drama "Cinta Endless Datu Museng & Maipa Deapati" by BSI in 2015 (Structural Approach). Results of his research found there are many different aspects to character, plot, setting, point of view, tone, theme, figurative language, and moral values This research uses a qualitative descriptive analysis method and adaptation theory and Structural Approach. This research has similarities with this study are never separated from adaptation but has an object, additional structural approach as a theory, and a different analysis of moral values in research. While this study uses the adaptation of the novel into the film as an object by using Linda Hutcheon's theory to find out how the differences and motivations in the film are.

Research conducted by Habrnalova (2016): "Literary Works by Hanif Kureishi and their Film Adaptations". The results of his research found After explaining some of the main benefits of adaptation theory by Linda Hutcheon.

Her research found there were clear differences between telling and showing modes of engagement, they heightened the action in both works. Furthermore, there are also different complications/climaxes between the novel and the drama. The last, there is a difference in resolution between novel and drama. The similarity with this study is using Linda Hutcheon's theory but with different results in conditional theory.

Anushiravani and Elinezhadi (2016): “An Analytical study of 2013 Cinematic adaptation of The Great Gatsby”. Using Linda Hutcheon's theory; what, who, and why, how, when, and where. Adaptation and composed are comparative literary terms used to describe the ways in which different texts adapt or consist of similar elements. Cinema and literature are two different art forms that use different means of expression, namely the words on the page and the images on the screen. They learn about the similarities and differences between novels and films by doing this research. While my research uses the theory of Linda Hutcheon but only focuses on the differences and motivations of the novel into film The Hate You Give.

Kayyis (2016): Comparison between Novel and Film “Divergent” and using Ecranization theory. His thesis discusses how the process of converting a novel into a film "Devergent" works. He identified the essential elements of novels and films. This research focuses on subtraction, addition, and alteration based on Eneste's Ecranization theory. He found that modification, addition, and subtraction were the transformation of a novel into a film, and he used qualitative descriptive methods in his thesis. There are many differences with my research using adaptation theory by Linda Hutcheon and focus on the differences and motivations contained in the novel into film as an adaptation process.

Overall the data discussed related to the film The Hate You Give director by George Tillman Jr. is one of several modern film to increasingly focus on presenting strong messages of race, identity, and gender in American social life. Focusing on the black community, The Hate You Give depicted the diversity within America's minority groups. The director presented characters such as Starr and Amandla as black people with various physical characteristics. Black characters were presented in various appearances, such as wearing different hairstyles and textures, facial features, skin colors, and hairstyles. Nevertheless, society considers them "black people" and places them in the same group are easy targets for police brutality.

In the film's opening scene, Starr's father (played by Russell Hornsby) gave him and his brother a pep talk, telling them how to behave without confrontation in front of the police. Tillman said he did it with his own son as well. To make the Star felt like family on screen, Tillman said he asked the actors, also included Regina Hall as Starr's mother, spent two weeks rehearsing together. The results show a strong, caring, and united African-American family. It was also rooted in Tillman's experience. In the early 1980s, his parents sat him down to let him know that things were going to be tough; her father had been laid off from his job at the Chrysler plant in Milwaukee, and not long after that, someone broke into their house and stole their Christmas gifts. But they promised to get through it together. At the same time, Tillman said he wanted "The Hate You Give" to reflect the other less comfortable realities of black life, from dealing with trauma to the ugly truth that young black people are first seen as a threat.

Tillman's strategy was to show that it was not just a white thing. In the film, Common played Starr's uncle, a cop in the same department as the officer who killed his friend. He made a speech in the film in which he admitted that, if he were in the situation of another officer, he probably would have done the same thing because of the perception that black men are dangerous. As the country continued to witness brutality by security forces against members of racial minorities, several media objects have sprung up to express social dissatisfaction with this kind of discrimination in modern times. In addition to meanings and messages about race, the film raises the theme of gender differences and position in society.

In particular, the film exposes stereotypes about black women, which persisted in the country. Lesha played the conventional role of "welfare queen" ready to put her white husband above her son Seven from a previous relationship. Lack of economic opportunity in minority communities encouraged men to engage in crime and the drug business. Still, women were left to understand the consequences when police abuse men. Women like Lisa and Lesha had no choice but to act as "welfare queens" or depend on their white suitors for the chance to improve their lives.

Within the black community, there was an additional layer of division beyond racism. Some members were more acceptable to society than others, because of their skin color and chance at life. Starr was comfortable in its society and acceptable to a predominantly white school because he was "whiter", considering he was multiracial. Likewise, drug-dealing gangs and groups within black communities efficiently targeted and rejected more white people like Starr and not "blacker" members like his half-brother Seven.

The Hate You Give exposed the injustices and social divisions that run deep in American society in the modern world. Non-white groups were placed in certain communities where opportunities for economic and social development are limited. In addition, earlier police targeted and abused members of minority communities solely on the basis of stereotyped views and not evidence. This film also revealed the causes of divisions within the minority group itself, which in turn affect men and women based on their appearance and limited life opportunities.

As a director Tillman was simply trying to find honesty, humor and emotion. It was a very emotional scene to shoot, especially during pre-production. All of that was trying to have a responsibility to did it right, but also to humanize. Keep everyone human. Defend them as real people and not as clichéd stereotypes.

All humans have various differences this is a form of admiring the creator for creating humans in various shapes and forms. With this diversity, harmony will be created to respect each other, but some of them even consider that difference to be the benchmark for who was the noblest of them or in other words they create their own caste. And the thing that was most often used as a benchmark was skin color, for them skin color symbolized who they were and what their position was so that those with white skin felt better than those with black skin. Racism, racial discrimination, prejudice and various attitudes towards intolerance still exist, not only in parts of the world that are stereotyped regarding this situation, such as in the United States, and in the United States.

The film reflected the real-life everyday experiences of African Americans struggling to raise children in loving homes, in a society where interactions with the police, regardless of guilt or innocence were real. This was a film that does virtually everything right, including solid casting, and a story that engages its audience just as credible and real as it feels.

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTIONS

There are two parts of this chapter; conclusion and suggestions, after findings and analyzing the differences between the novel and its film adaptation and the motivations of adaptor adapting that novel into film.

A. Conclusion

This study finds the motivations of adaptor in adapting the novel into the film. They are the economy, the legal constraints, cultural capital and personal reasons.

1. The first economic benefits or profits achieved by the adaptor. As it is known that the adaptor adapts the work purpose to a great advantage. The advantage here means they can earn a lot of money from their customized work. Profits sometimes come from franchising adapted works.
2. The second legal constraints here means not to ignore the relevant legal views, adapting a work must be based on the law or a copyright adaptor. George Tillman, new adaptor is warned not to copy Angie Thomas' work without permission, as they have their own rules.
3. The third cultural capital is adapting the film The Hate You Give also aims to enhance or promote the cultural values that exist in the story. Black people have a way of dressing that is identical to them and a way of speaking English which is declared as slang, but the culture of black people speaking slang and dressing like black people. The adaptor is intended to elevate the culture shown in the film The Hate You Give according to the novel version.

4. The last the personal reasons the adaptor decides to adapt. The story experienced by the main character in the novel is closely related to Tillman's life experience. The film shows many people of color having to go through and deal with society.

B. Suggestions

Based on the conclusion above, the researcher would like to give some suggestions based on the previous conclusion. Some suggestions are as follows:

1. The researcher suggests for the next researcher who want to study the novel and film the hate you give by using a comparative study.
2. The researcher suggests for the next researcher who want to study the adaptation of novel into film to use theory Eneste because this theory is easier to understand for adapting a literary work.

The Motives of Adaptation The Hate You Give Novel into Film

In this research which is the motivations of adaptor in adapting that novel into film. The motives are economic, legal constraints, cultural capital and personal reasons. The research finds several data which categories into some motives, as follows:

No	The Economic
1	“As I read on, the dialogue and language reminded me of a party I attended years ago in my high school days, and there was a shooting,” recalls Tillman. “The way [Angie] got it and the theme. I was so blown away. I must call him immediately. We're talking maybe two weeks after that. We discussed how I saw the film, the important characters, the sound of the theme. We really connected. Then I can sell it to Fox at that point.”
2	“It was instinctive,” says Tillman “Amandla (Stenberg) was reading the book at the same time I was. He and I felt this was something we could partner up with. When I met him, I felt he was the one. I never looked at anyone else for the role, because it's like at the age of 19 reading a book that wasn't self-published, how many other actresses or actors are looking for their own material at that age? Tillman also felt Stenberg could personally relate to the role.
3	“He grew up in Inglewood, and he went to white private schools and dealt with these issues of identity,” says Tillman. “She's already an activist and she's already a talented actress. I felt that his greatest work was yet to come, so he became my partner from the start.”
4	“I've always wanted to work with Regina, because I think she's very flexible. He actually auditioned for Notorious. He auditioned for Lil' Kim. My wife had me save all my auditions through the years. [Regina's] audition for Kim was amazing, but I went in a different direction. I always looked at him like, 'Damn, that audition was awesome,’” Tillman said.
5	“I saw (Algee Smith) in The New Edition Story. He's like Ralph (Tresvant) in that respect. So I was like, 'This guy is great!’” recalls Tillman. “Her agent kept calling me and saying, 'Just give her the role.' I was like, 'No, Algee has to come here because he needs to read.' He came in and he was the guy, he was so charismatic. Then Amandla saw her audition, and she started to smile. I've never even put them in a room together, because I just know they already have it together.

6	"It was all very instinctive," Tillman said of the actor's creative chemistry and Stenberg's portrayal of Starr, in particular. "There are many different people who bring different elements. I feel like we got the right cast." "Fox never once said, 'You have to go out and get the biggest actor.' It's all about what's right for the role. I think the success of the book helped us in that regard."

The Legal Constraints
7	"Sometimes with adaptation, it's like the author, okay, we get a book, thank you. Whereas George is not like that but I get direct calls from George every week even in post production, that's how he wants me to be involved, making me believe in George Tillman as an adapter from my novel entitled The Hate You Give so it's been collaboration from the start. He respects the source material and that means a lot to me."
The Cultural Capital
8	"First page, (main character) Starr is at a party. I said, "This reminds me of a party I attended in the 80s in high school." It's a house party. An inner-city neighborhood in Milwaukee, it was dark, and everyone was having fun. And then pow, pow! This shooting happened and everyone started running. As I continued to read it became police brutality. It gets into a very specific cultural thing. It identifies who you are as a black individual living in two different worlds. I had to speak to Angie Thomas right away before this book was published. I'm so excited to direct this film. This is some evidenced or affect of motivation by review about the success of the film adaptation of The Hate You Give."
9	"This isn't about black or white, "he says "Bullshit," says Daddy. "If this was out in Riverton Hills and his name was Richie, we wouldn't be having this conversation." "I heard he was a drug dealer," says Uncle Carlos. (Thomas: 54)

10	Tillman said that, the Story first appeared in manuscript form when I was working on Luke Cage for Marvel. I was captivated when I read the first chapter. Starr's story moved me, it's a story I've never seen told like that before the idea of this character trying to find his identity, having to do code switching to fit his school environment. The shooting by a white cop opened up a lot of conversations, issues in society, and questions this girl asked from an innocent place. I love the story and the possibility of telling it from a dramatic and visual point of view. Usually for stories like this, you do research, read other materials, seen other film. I didn't do that much for this film. Many come out instinctively. I grew up as a young person in Milwaukee, like many cities in the Midwest, it is very separate. I live on the north side all I see are African Americans, no white people. I have always felt that relations with police officers in the community were a problem. At an early age, my parents transferred me to a white public school from a predominantly African-American school. I could feel what it was like to be in the white community, how education was viewed there, how funds were spent. The world is completely different. The idea, the design palette, the sound and the look of the film came to me. It was instinctive based on my experience as a young African-American Male, it even extended to my filmmaking education. As a director who went to film school at Columbia College in Chicago, I was one of only three African Americans to study film.
