ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Alhamdulillah Rabbil Alamin the writer praises her highest gratitude to Allah SWT who has given her blessing and mercy in completing this thesis. Salam and shalawat are due to the highly chose prophet, Muhammad Saw, her families and followers until the end of the world.

The writer realizes that this thesis cannot be completed without the assistance of the number of people. Therefore, the writer would like to express her deepest appreciation and thanks to those people who have helped in completing this thesis for their useful motivation, guidance and sacrifices.

1. The writer's deepest appreciation is due to her beloved parents, Munirah and Jumaedi. Thanks to all of her sister and brother who always gives her motivation and prayer for safety, health and every success of the writer.
2. Her most profound and sincere appreciation to her first consultant, Drs. H. Nur Asik, M.Hum. And the second consultant, Drs. H. Abd Muis Said, M.Ed. For their support, advice, guidance, corrections, and suggestion since the preliminary manuscript until the completion of this thesis.
3. Her greatest thanks also due to Prof. Dr. H. Azhar Arsyad, MA. as the rector of UIN Alauddin Makassar, Prof. Dr. H. Moh Natsir Mahmud, MA as the dean of Tarbiyah and Teaching Science Faculty to all lectures and the staff of English Education Department and Tarbiyah and Teaching Science Faculty, whose names could not be mentioned one by one their guidance and service in the writer's academic process.

4. Her special thanks to lecturer of translation of English Education Department of Tarbiyah and Teaching Science Faculty UIN Alauddin Makassar. Drs Bukhari who has kindly and enthusiastically participated in the writer's research. This thesis would have not been possible to be finished without his cooperation.
5. Special thanks to her closed friends for their encouragement, help and togetherness. They are Rahmayani, Nurlina, Munawar, Nurmayanti, Besse Wahidda S.Pd, Darmiati, Hamanza and Sukirman S.Pd.
May Allah SWT always be with us Amin.

This research was aimed at describing of the types of difficulties encountered by the Second Year Students of MA DDI Padang Lampe Kecamatan Ma'rang Kabupaten Pangkep in Translating Indonesian Noun Phrases into English.

This research used descriptive method. The instrument used to obtain data was a translation test, some Indonesian noun phrases given in contexts. The population of the research was the second year students of MA DDI Padang Lampe Kecamatan Ma'rang Kabupaten Pangkep academic year 2009/2010. The number of the population 30 students. The research took total sampling technique, however there were only 23 students who took part in the test. The sample of the research was only 23 students because the rest of the students went to the rice field

The finding showed the Second Year Students of MA DDI Padang Lampe Kecamatan Ma'rang Kabupaten Pangkep encountered some types of difficulties in translating Indonesian noun phrases into English. The types of difficulties they encountered were: (1) the students had difficulties in ordering the elements of both pre-modifiers and post-modifiers. (2) The students had difficulties in finding the correct elements of both pre-modifiers and post-modifiers. (3) The students had difficulties in writing diction.

CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

A. Background

Translation is the transfer of thoughts and ideas from one language into another (Brislin, 1976:1). Brislin views translation as the reproduction of message from the source language into the receptor language. His emphasis lies on the transfer of thoughts and ideas only. However, when we view from the target language, translation can be operationally defined as the act of using another language to express thoughts or ideas of a source language. In this case, a translator must use correct devices of the target language to express the same thoughts or an idea as the source language does.

An act of translating is not an easy task to do. A translating is not an easy task to do. A translator must always try to find out the closest equivalent of the source language in the target, not only in term of meaning but also in term of style if it is possible (Nida in Widyamartaya, 1989: 11) thus, sentence arrangements, word orders in phrases, and diction indeed become the field where a translate should work.

Translating is a part of language learners' activities. There is no one who can translate from one language into another but only those who have learned both the source and the target language. In translation, the language learners try to apply what they have learned about the language involved.

In short, language learners or translators may yield wrong translations in some way. They may produce the target language in unacceptable sentence arrangement, unacceptable word order in phrase, or unacceptable dictionary. The existence of this writing is an account on the types of difficulties encountered by the students as language learners in translating noun phrase from Indonesian into English.

B. Problem Statement

Based on the background above, the writer puts forward the following research question:” what types of difficulties encountered by the second year students of MA DDI Padang Lampe Kecamatan Ma’rang Kabupaten Pangkep in translating the noun phrase from Indonesia into English”?

C. Research Objective

This research aims to find out the types of difficulties encountered by the second year students of MA DDI Padang Lampe Kecamatan Ma’rang Kabupaten Pangkep in translating the noun phrase from Indonesia into English.

D. Research Significance

This research are expected to be useful for the teachers of English of MA DDI Padang Lampe Kecamatan Ma’rang Kabupaten Pangkep for helping the students to overcome the difficulties in translating the noun phrase from Indonesia into English.

E. Research Scope

The research focuses on the difficulties encountered by the students in the translating the noun phrase from Indonesia into English. The difficulties meant here cover four types namely: disorders of items, additions of unnecessary items, omissions of necessary items, and diction, in accordance with the contexts in which the phrase occur.

CHAPTER II

RIVIEW OF RELATID LITERATURE

A. Previous Related Research Findings

There are many researchers have reported on their research about difficulties faced and translation. Some of the findings are presented in the following:

1. Some findings about difficulties faced

Raihana (2005:45) concluded about the factor that faced by the students to differentiate homonyms as follows: (1) the difference of sound and Indonesian. Were Indonesian applies phonemic in writing system. (2) Mast of the students are resultant to memorize the vocabularies. (3) The students do not know the correct us age of English structures and grammars. (4) The teacher did not utilize recorded native speakers pronunciation in language laboratory often enough. (5) Lack of practicing throughout English films or song TV and cassette at home.

Nurhidayah (2006:47) concluded about the difficulties faced by the students in using multi-Word verbs are: (1) the students' confusion of the combination of verb and particle (adverb and preposition). (2) The multiple meaning of multi-word verbs. (3) The complexion of grammatical form of multi-word verbs.

2. Finding about translation magazine text

According to Sati Fitriani (2004:49) (1) the students have limited English vocabulary which is becomes disability for them to make a good translation. This can be braved from the mean score of the students in mastering English vocabulary is 5,46 which is classified “poor” score. (2) Disability and lack of English to translate into Indonesian effectively and appropriately that have caused them to be no able to translate English magazine that Indonesian. (3) Mast of students are not able to replace or transfer a massage from the source language of text into target language.

According to me difficulties encountered by the students of MA DDI Padang lampe Kecamatan Ma’rang Kabupaten Pangkep in translation Indonesian noun phrase, the students must be know addition unnecessary of elements, disorder unnecessary of element and diction. If the students do not know automatic the student can not answer the well question.

B. Definition of Translation

People throughout the world speak different languages. The languages commonly known and spoken by people are English, German, French, Arabic, Indonesian, etc. These languages are spoken in different countries for communication.

As social creatures, people need to have a contact with each other, not only within the same speech community but also with other countries. The contact, or let’s say the communications, of people between the countries need to do translations. The communication share by two communicants of different native language will yield a translation because they together have to speak one language only. This can be understood from Brislin's statement stated in the earlier chapter.

In Brislin's statement, the key term is the transfer of thoughts and ideas. In this case, Brislin does not limit that the transfer of thoughts or ideas must be performed written or spoken. Thus, according to his definition can occur whether written or spoken. An oral communication occurring between, for example, an Indonesian and an European in which they have to speak in English, can be termed translating. In this case, both the Indonesian and the European as communicants have to transfer their thoughts and ideas into English. Otherwise, they can not share any communication.

Still pertaining to the definition of translation, Seleskovitch in Brislin (1976: 92) defines translation:

“Any substitution of one language component for another (be they phonemes, or in their written items, letters, grammatical marks, or lexical items) resulting in a correct linguistic equivalent could be termed translation”

From the definition above, we find such a phrase as in their written forms. This term denotes that the substitution of the language components to be termed as translation can also occur in spoken forms.

Another one definition of translation is one which is pointed out by Nida in Widyamarta (1989:11). Nida say:

“Translating consist of reproducing in the receptor language the closest natural equivalent of the source language message, first in term of meaning and secondly in term of style“

The term reproducing in the receptor language in the definition above indicates that, in translation, what a translator produces in the receptor language is based on what has been firstly produced by other people, or by the translator himself. However, Nida still does not limit that what to be reproduced by a translator must be in written form or in spoken form

From the two definitions above, we now may comprehend that translation is the process of changing speech or writing from one language (source language) into another language (target). In oral communication occurring between an Indonesian and an English man in which they in English, the Indonesian of course transfer his mind into English. On the contrary, when they speak Indonesia, the English man of course transfer his mind into Indonesia. In this situation, an oral translation occurs, when both communicants can not transfer their minds spoken, they of course communicate in written form they transfer their minds written, and of course this results in written translation. Hence, there are two forms of translation, namely oral translation and written translation.

However, as spoken language is rather different from written language, oral translation should also be differentiated from written translation. To differentiate the two term of translation, we call the oral translation as interpretation and the written translation as translation. Thus, translation is always referred to the transfer of thoughts or ideas from one written language into another written language.

C. Phrases

What is a phrase? In Rasyid (1988: 74) we can find some definition of a phrase pointed out by different experts, as quoted below:

1. A phrase is a group of related words, without subject and predicate, use as a noun substitute (called a noun phrase) or a modifier (called an adjective phrase or an adverb phrase). A phrase is performed with (1) a preposition and therefore called a prepositional phrase, (2) a participle and therefore called a participial phrase and (3) a gerund and therefore called a gerund phrase, or (4) an infinitive and therefore called an infinitive phrase (Morries, et. al. in Rasyid, 1988:74).
2. A phrase is a group of related words that does not have a subject and predicate. A phrase performs the function of a single part of speech (Brewton, et. al. in Rasyid, 1988:74).
3. Phrases are group of related words connected to a sentence or to one of the elements in it by means of a preposition or a verbal. A phrase has no subject or predicate and can not stand alone (Corder in Rasyid, 1988: 74)
4. A phrase is a group of related word (1) which does not contain a subject-predicate combination and (2) which, as an entire unit, serves as part of speech role in the larger construction of which it is a part (La Palombara in Rasyid, 1988:74).

5. A phrase is a group of related words without a subject and predicate used as a noun, adjective, or verb. Phrases are classified as prepositional, participial, gerund, and infinitive (Hornil in Rasyid :1988:74)
6. In grammar, a phrase is a sequence of a few words conveying single thought or forming a separate part of a sentence but not containing a subject and predicate: specifically, in linguistics, a phrase is a group of two or more that can function as a grammatical structure (Simon and Schuster in Rasyid 1988:74)
- a. The ideas that the definitions share above can be elaborated as in the following:
- A group of related words,
  - A sequence of a few words,
  - A group of two or more words.
- b. This means that a phrase is systematic and orderly. The words that constitute a phrase have certain sequences or positions. A phrase is not a group of jumbled words. The following examples perhaps can make this clear:

Phrases

- A diligent student
- A very kind teacher

jumbled words

- student a diligent
  - kind very teacher a
- c. This shows us that a phrase is contrasted with a clause which has a subject and a predicate. However, this does not mean that a phrase can not be a subject of a clause, or a predicate of clause. Being a subject of a clause or a predicate of a clause is one of the functions of phrase in clauses. The functions of phrases are:

- performs the function of single part of speech,
- Used as an adverb,
- Serves as part of speech role, and
- Forming a separate part of a sentence.

This indicates that a phrase has a certain function. A phrase may function as a noun, a verb, an adjective or an adverb.

Based on the definitions as well as on their elaborations given above, phrase in fact consist of several types, among other are noun phrases, adjective phrases, verb phrases, adverb phrases, prepositional phrases, gerund phrases, infinitive phrases, and participial phrase.

In relation to this writing, the only phrases to be discussed further are noun phrases. The discussion on this covers the way to form them focusing on pre-modifiers (pre-modifications), headword, and pos modifiers (post-modification)

D. Noun Phrases

From the definition and their elaboration given above, we now comprehend that a noun phrase is a phrase that can serve as a noun, and thus, it can function both as a subject and an object in a clause. The form of a noun phrase shows us one of the words in the group is indispensable to the group and called headword. The other words in the group are dependent on the headword. For short, we call them dependent, which serve as the modifier of the noun headword in the group.

A noun phrase consists of two elements namely a noun or pronoun headword and modifiers. In English, some modifiers or dependents in noun phrases precede the noun headword and some other follow or come after the noun headword. Hence, in English noun phrase there are two types of modifiers namely pre-modifiers and post modifiers. Pre-modifiers are those that precede the noun headwords, while post-modifiers are those that come after noun headwords. (Jackson, 1982: 67-70)

1. Pre-modifiers in noun phrase

Pre-modifiers in noun phrase consist of a number of word classes or sub –classes in a specific order. It can be an identifier, numeral/quantifier, adjective, or a noun modifier (Jackson, 1982:67).

a. Identifiers as pre-modifiers in noun phrase

The class of identifier includes “article”: “a” and the; demonstratives: this, that: and possessives: my, your, their, his, her, our, and its. As pre-modifier in noun phrases, identifiers precede the headword. For example:

- 1) Articles: a book, the table, and etc.
- 2) Demonstrative: this house, that car, and etc.
- 3) Possessives: my house, your cousin, and etc.

When there is a numeral in a noun phrase, the identifier comes before the numeral, for example the few books, my five day visit, the first example, etc. Again, in a noun phrase, there is only one identifier that may occur. This means that articles, demonstratives, and possessives are mutually exclusive in English noun phrase. Thus, it is not possible to say the my book, instead of the book or my book

b. Numerals/quantifiers as pre-modifiers

Numerals/quantifiers are classified into definite and indefinite quantifiers. Definite quantifiers include ordinal numbers: (first, second, three, and so on), while indefinite quantifiers include such words as: Few, many, several, and the like.

As modifiers in noun phrases, quantifiers precede the headwords for examples:

1. Definite quantifiers
  - a) Ordinal: first book, fifth children, and etc
  - b) Cardinal: one book, five children, and etc.
2. Indefinite quantifiers: few books, many book, several table, etc.

In noun phrase, more than one quantifier may at once occur though there are a restricted number of combinations. The combination could be one ordinal and one cardinal or one ordinal and one indefinite quantifier. If such combination occurs, the sequences must be ordinal + cardinal or ordinal + indefinite quantifier, for example:

- 1) One ordinal and one cardinal:

The first five books, not the five first books

- 2) One ordinal and one indefinite quantifier:

The first few hours, not the few first hours

c. Adjective as pre-modifiers

Adjectives, which to amplify the head noun in some way, come after the identifier and numeral/quantifier. Several adjectives or none at all, may occur in a noun phrase, and when a number of adjectives do occur, there appears to be some principles of ordering at work, for example, native speakers of English regard big red fox as grammatical, but red big fox as deviant. This means that, if more than one adjective occurs in a noun phrase, it refers to size comes before another that refers to color. So, the sequence like big red fox can not be red big fox. Another example is small white car, which cannot be white small car.

d. Noun modifiers as pre-modifiers in noun phrase

Between adjectives and headword usually come noun modifiers. Thus, nouns may function not only as head of noun phrase, but also as a modifier in the noun phrases, for examples, a country garden, the village policemen, the news agency, and etc. It is unusual, however, for more than one noun modifier to occur in a noun phrase.

A noun phrase may consist of one headword preceded by two or more modifiers of different word classes, for example:

1. The two potential teachers
2. The two very potential teachers
3. The two very young potential teaches
4. The last two very young potential teachers

When two or more modifiers come before a noun headword, the sequences of the modifiers must follow the following rule:

Limiting adjective/determiner, descriptive adjective, size, shape, age, color, origin (nationality), substance, present/past participle, noun, denominal, + noun headword (Quirk, et al. in Rasyid, 1988: 77)

What does the order above mean? When a word stating size (for example small) and a word stating shape (for example: triangular) occur at once to modify a noun, the order must be size + shape + noun headword. So such a group as small triangular table can not is triangular small table. Other examples are as following:

No	Size	Shape	Age	Color	Noun
1	Small	triangular	old	white	Table
2	Big	triangular			Table
3	Big		old		Table
4		Triangular		white	Table
5	Small			white	Table
6	Big			white	Table

When two or more modifiers of a noun phrase, the order must follow the rule above. Otherwise, the noun phrase is disordered, and thus, it is not a phrase but a group of jumbled word instead.

2. Post-modifiers in noun phrases

Post-modifiers in noun phrases can be found in single word, word group or phrase, or clause. Thus, in noun phrase, we can have single word post-modifiers, word group/phrasal post-modifier, and clause post-modifiers. Single word post-modifiers can be adverbs or adjectives and phrasal post-modifiers consist of relative clauses and non-finite clauses (Jackson, 1982: 69)

a. Single word post-modifiers.

As the name suggested, single word post-modifiers consist of only one word. They can be adjectives or adverb, examples:

1. Adjectives as post-modifiers:

- Someone brave
- Something important

2. Adverbs as post-modifiers:

- The time before
- The room above

An adverb as a post-modifier can be a reduction of a prepositional phrase, such as: the room above us, the time before this one, and etc.

b. Prepositional phrases as post-modifiers

A prepositional phrase is a phrase which is in some way preceded by a preposition, such as: In the room, on the table, at the office, above the table, next door, and etc. a prepositional phrase is formed with a preposition plus a noun phrase. As a post-modifier in a noun phrase, a prepositional phrase gives information about places or describes the headword. For example:

1. The book on the table is mine.
2. The building in front of my house was damaged by storm yesterday.
3. The man with glasses is my friend.

The bold part in (1) and (2) are prepositional phrases. They are parts of the noun phrases, that is, post-modifiers which tell about places. The italic part in (3) is also a prepositional phrase.

It does not tell about place, but describes the headword.

c. Clausal post-modifiers

As the name suggested, a clausal post-modifier is a post-modifier which is in a clause form. It can be a relative clause or a non-finite clause.

1. Relative clauses as post-modifier

Relative clauses are those clauses which are initialized by relative words functioning to relate the clause with the headwords. In their uses relative clause are restricted by either person: first, second, third person; number: singular or plural; and the tenses of speaking: past, present, and etc. Since they are restricted, relative clause are also called finite clauses. For example:

- a. The teacher who teacher me English died yesterday.
- b. The books which are in the library belong to the university.
- c. The man that gave you an English book yesterday is my uncle.

2. Non-finite clauses as post-modifier

Non finite clauses are clauses which are, in their uses, restricted neither by person: first, second, and third person; number: singular or plural; nor by the tenses of speaking: past, present, and etc. Non-finite clauses can be preceded by infinitives and called infinitive clause, present participle and called present participial clauses and past participle and called past participial clauses.

a). Infinitive clauses as post-modifiers

Examples:

The students to be watched during the examination are those who attend the class irregularly.

b). Present participial clauses as post-modifiers

Example:

The books giving much information on structure are available in the university library.

c) Past participial clauses as post-modifiers

Example:

The word groups described to us in the structure course is not so difficult. Rasyid, 1998: 18).

Based on the examples given above, we may say that non-finite clauses are the reductions of finite clauses. The examples show the non-finite clauses are derived from the finite clauses by omitting the relative word and the form of be (if any), and then change the verb into correct forms. Successively, the non-finite clauses give from (1) to (3) are derived from the following finite clauses:

- a) The student who must be watched during the examination,
- b) The books which give much information on structure,
- c) The word groups which were described to us in the structure course.

E. Contrastive Analysis

In the earlier part of this chapter, we have described that translation is the transfer of thoughts of one language into another. We may say that translation is the use of different language to express the thoughts or ideas of the source language, whether from the translator's native language into a foreign language or from a foreign language into the translator's native. In relation to this writing, translation refers to the use of a foreign language (English) to express the same thoughts or ideas of Indonesia. Thus, English is viewed as the target language while Indonesia is viewed as the source language. In this case, the Indonesia students are considered the translator's, that is, their ability to use English in expressing the same thoughts or ideas of the Indonesia given.

It is very impossible for the Indonesian students (we call them translators) to transfer the thoughts of the Indonesia into English if they do not understand English. The knowledge of English is the only thing that can help the Indonesian students to do an Indonesian English translation. Accordingly, they have to know how the two languages work. Knowing how the two language work will help them to transfer thoughts either from Indonesia into English or from English into Indonesia. For this purpose, we then need to know the differences between Indonesia and English noun phrase count ructions. We need know the differences between the two languages which can express the same thoughts or ideas. The differences are commonly shown in a constructive analysis, that is, the analysis performed on two or more languages to show the similarities or the differences between the languages involved.

The contrastive analysis in this writing deals with the differences between noun phrase construction in Indonesia and English. This is intended to give ideas about how the Indonesia noun phrases are transferred into English without any changes in meaning. In addition, such the analysis will enable us to analyze the errors made by the translators in producing noun phrase in English, as Dulay (1982: 140) say that the differences between the two languages analyzed are tough to account for the majority of second languages learner's errors and contrastive analysis is the way or technique to show the differences.

Indonesia and English have different grammatical constructions both in sentences and phrases. The construction of nouns of the two languages can be seen in the following analysis:

1. Noun phrases constructions

Indonesian	English
a. Rumah yang besar H M	a. big house M H
b. Gadis yang cantik H M	b. pretty girl M H
c. Kursi yang rusak H M	c. broken chair M H
d. Sebuah buku M H	d. a book M H
e. Dua buah buku M H	e. two books M H
f. Dua puluh orang siswa M H	f. twenty students M H
g. Temah yang pertama H M	g. the first theme M H

h. Beberapa buku	h. some books
M        H	M    H
i. Banyak buku	I. many books
M        H	M    H
j. Sebuah Universitas yang bagus
M        H                    M
j. a good University
M        H
k. Orang yang sedang berdiri	k. the Man standing
H        M	H    H    M
l. Orang yang ingi bertemu	i. the man
H        M	M    H
dengan saya	wanting to meet me
M	M
m. Beberapa wanita cantik	m. some beautiful
H        M    H	M
yang muda	young ladies
M	H
n. Beberapa wanita muda	n. some beautiful young
yang cantik	ladies
M	H

From the example above, we can have the following notes:

1. Modifiers in Indonesia are commonly followed by headwords (as seen in a, b, c).
2. Modifiers consisting in numeral adjectives such as: a, two, etc. precede the headwords, ether in Indonesia or in English, as seen in d, e, and f.

3. Ordinal numeral adjectives always come after the headwords in Indonesia but precede the headwords in English, as in g.
4. Quantifiers in both Indonesia and English always precede the headwords, as in n and I above. Other example are: a lot of cheese, few, little comfort, etc. (Jackson, 1982: 64)
5. A noun phrase formed with headword + modifier in Indonesia may result in the order of modifier + headword + modifier in English, as in i. other example are:

a). Meja yang besar (big table)
 H M M H

b). Dua buku yang menarik (two interesting books)
 M H H M M H

6. The post modification in Indonesian has basically the same construction as that in English, as in k and l. The principle difference lies on the use of yang in Indonesian, and the use of the ing-verb in English. In Indonesia, the word yang is sometimes following by sedang plus a verb to indicate an on going event other examples:

a). Mobil yang sedang berlari di jalan (the car running on the road)
 H M M H M

b). Perempuan tua yang sedang berdiri di sudut jalan itu
 H M
 (The old lady standing in the corner of the room)
 M H M

c). Buku di atas meja itu (the book on the table)
 H M M H M

7. In translation, some noun phrase formed with such the order as headword + modifier in Indonesia are possible to have two equivalent in English. We preferably use the order (modifier + modifier in accordance with whether or not the modifier has a complement. Examples:

a) Buku yang menarik itu adalah milik saya.

H M
(the interesting book is mine)

M H

b). Buku yang menarik bagi saya adalah berwarna merah.

H M
(The book interesting for me is the red one)

M H M

The example in (a) show us that the adjective yang menarik has no complement and so are transferred into order of modifier + headword. In (b), the adjective yang menarik has a complement: bagi saya (for me). Hence, we prefer to use the adjective and it's complement a post-modifier to a pre-modifier.

Other noun phrases formations interesting to be discussed here are the use the word yang in Indonesia with their equivalent in English (e.g.in m and n). Indonesian the word that comes immediately after yang carries the emphasis of the expression. Thus, word that expresses about shape and age may be mutually substitutable in order to indicate differ emphasis in meaning. In English, however, as described in the earlier part of this chapter, when shape and age occur together in a noun, shape should precede age.

Example:

(1). Indonesia

(a). Amir ingin bertemu dengan wanita cantik yang mudah itu.

(b). Amir ingin bertemu dengan wanita mudah yang cantik itu.

The word yang in (a) is immediately followed by the word muda and (b) by the word cantik. In meaning, the example in (a) denotes that there are some beautiful ladies who are perhaps of varying ages. However, the only beautiful lady to meet is the young one. Other beautiful ladies are not concerned with; the example in (b) denotes that there are some young ladies of different degrees of beauty. Some are beautiful and other is not, of the many young ladies, the beautiful one the only ladies to meet by Amir.

(2). English

Quirk, et al. (in Rasyid, 1988) says that when descriptive adjective and age occur together in a noun group, the descriptive adjective should precede the one that state about age. In the Indonesian examples above, cantik is equivalent to attractive and muda is equivalent to young. The word attractive is considered a descriptive adjective and young refers to age. Thus, in a noun phrase, attractive, precedes young and never proceeds

Translating Indonesia noun phrases into English attractive. Accordingly, the Indonesia example above can be transferred into English as follows:

“Amir wants to meet the beautiful young ladies”

F. Some possible difficulties in translating Indonesian noun phrases into English

Translating Indonesia noun phrase into English can be and even must be viewed as learning and using English as a second language for communication. Thus, a translator should be viewed as a second language learner or a second language user.

In relation to the second language learning Dulai (1982:138-139) puts forward the most common errors made by the second language learners, namely:

- a. Omitting grammatical morpheme, as in he hit car.
- b. Double marking a semantic feature, as in she didn't go back, instead of she didn't go back.
- c. Regularizing rules, as in woman's, instead of women.
- d. Using archieforms: one form in place of several, such as the use of her for both she and her, as in I saw her yesterday and she dances with my brothers
- e. Disordering a ruler that has been previously acquired. These types of errors are very possible to occur in translating Indonesia noun phrases into English. They are logical and reasonable well, since there are no two languages that have exactly the same set of possible arrangement to convey the same meaning,

With regard to translating Indonesia noun phrases into English, a translator may potentially find difficulties in word arrangement. These types of difficulties consist of three sub-types, namely: 1) omitting any items, 2) adding any items, and 3) disordering items. Besides, a translator may also find difficulties in term of diction.

The omission of item in a translation could be the omission of a word, for example an article, and a preposition. It could also be the omission of plural marker (e) s.

The addition of item could be the addition of unnecessary elements, for example: the addition of a word, the addition of unnecessary element of a phrase, such as article and a preposition.

The order of items of ten brings problems to second language learners. This can also occur to translators in translating from their native language into another or other foreign languages. The disorder of items seems to occur mostly in translating noun phrase. The language learners have difficulties both in ordering the pre-modifiers and in determining which article is appropriately be used.

G. Conceptual Framework

The main focus of this research is the types of difficulties encountered by the third year students of MA DDI Padang Lampe Kecamatan Ma'rang Kabupaten Pangkep in translation the Indonesia noun phrases into English. The difficulties to be found are those that concern with the pre-modification and post-modification in English. The difficulties to be found are those that concern with the pre-modification and post-modification in English noun phrases.

In translation, there seems to be many aspects that are very important, such as structure, and vocabulary. However, in relation to this research, the language structure to be discussed is only the word order of pre-modifiers and post-modifiers, while vocabulary is left. Therefore, the students are allowed to consult their dictionaries in completing the test given.

In order to come to a conclusion this research firstly tries to find data about the difficulties encountered by the students in translating Indonesian noun phrases into English.

The data obtained through the test are then analyzed in errors analysis, which are classified into four categories, namely:

- 1). Disorder of items,
- 2). Addition of unnecessary items,
- 3). Omission of necessary items,
- 4). Diction, misuse of articles.

The errors made by the students are considered the difficulties they encountered in translation. The difficulties then become the output of this research. For short, this research goes through the following conceptual framework:

H. Resume

Translation is the transfer of thoughts or ideas from one language (source language) into another language (target language). The source language can be foreign language and the native language.

In translation, a translator should produce the receptor language in a closest natural equivalent the source language message thus a translator should be of good knowledge of both the source language and the target language. Therefore, the work of a translator may not be separated from the work of a language learner.

In translating Indonesian noun phrases into English. A translation should have good knowledge of noun phrases formation in the two languages. It has to know when pre-modification and post-modification are used, or when the two terms are together used simultaneously in one construction. Besides, a translator should know the order of modifiers: pre-modifiers and post-modifiers.

In translation noun phrases from Indonesian into English, a translator is very possible to yield translation containing some type of errors. Beside on the types of errors possibly made by the translator, we may predict that he or she may find difficulties in word arrangement. With regard to this term, a translator may have difficulties both in ordering the modifiers and finding the appropriate words to convey the meaning of the source.

CHAPTER III

RESEARCH METHODOLOGI

This chapter describes the research design, variables, population and sample, research instrument, and technique of data analysis.

A. Research Method

The design that applied in this research is descriptive. It aims at describing the data disorder of elements, addition of necessary elements, omission of necessary elements, and diction input noun phrases contacted by the respondents.

B. Research Variable

The variable of this research are the student's disorder of elements, addition of necessary elements, omission of necessary elements, and diction.

C. Population and Sample

1. Population

To know more about the population, we must know what the definition of Population is. According to Arikunto (2002: 108) "population is totally of object research." Meanwhile sugiono (2003:90) defines "population is generalization region that consist of subject/ object having quality and certainly characteristic said by research to be studied and to be concludes." Look at the both definition of population so, the writer concludes that population is the totally from data source becoming object of research, whether is something or people.

The population of this research is the students of MA DDI Padang Lampe Kecamatan Ma'rang Kabupaten Pangkep at 2009/2010 academic year. The total number of the population are 30 students which consist of one class.

2. Sample

The sampling technique in this research is purposive sampling. The researcher takes one class at MA DDI Padang Lampe Kecamatan Ma'rang Kabupaten Pangkep is class II.

D. Research Instrument

In obtaining data, the researcher uses only one instrument namely translation test. It is aimed at knowing the types of difficulties encountered by students in translating Indonesia noun phrases which given in contexts. However, the students translate only the noun phrases in correct grammatical structure as if they are used in English contexts.

E. Data Collection Procedures

In collecting data, this research is carried out from 04th January 2010 until 04th February 2010. The procedure of collecting data is chronologically performed in administering this translation test, the researcher gives 20 number of objective tests. It is on the 2nd of February and runs for 60 minutes.

F. Data Analysis Technique

In analyzing data, the researcher applies errors analysis. The analysis intends to describe the types of errors made by the students in translating the Indonesian noun phrases into English.

The errors are analyzed in two categories namely grammatical errors and diction. This analysis concerned with the order of both pre-modifiers and post-modifiers: the addition disorder of items, of unnecessary items, the omission of necessary items, and the use of appropriate words. The difficulties encounter by the students in translating the Indonesian noun phrases into English are indicated by the types of errors that they produce in their translations. The students who make errors of the same terms, the more difficult the terms are.

CHAPTER IV

THE FINDING AND DISCUSSION

A. The Findings

Based on the data analysis present in appendix B. this research finds the following:

I. Disorders of Elements

The respondent's translations of noun phrases which are disorders of noun phrases which are disorder of elements as listed below:

Noun phrases produced by the respondent's	Meaning	Correct forms of the noun phrases
1. The round small table	meja bundar

6. Lesson that must be followed	pelajaran yang harus diikuti	1. The lesson must be attended 2. The lesson to attend
7. Alphabet of twenty six letters	abjad yang terdiri dari 26 huruf	1. Abjad of twenty six lattes

4. Diction

Some of the noun phrases produced by respondents undergo errors concerning with diction, as listen bellow:

Noun phrases produced by the respondents	Meaning	Correct of terms of the noun phrased
1. A very interesting place	suatu pemandangan yang Sangat menarik	a very interesting sight
2. The two operation tools	kedua alat bedah itu	1. The two surgical Instruments 2. Those two new Surgical tools

3. High and thin boy	laki-laki yang tinggi dan kurus itu	1 the thin tall boy 2 the tall and thin boy
----------------------	--	--

B. Discussion

1. Disorder of Elements

The noun phrase translations that were disordered produced by the respondents were respectively discussed below:

- a. The round small table (meja bundar yang kecil itu) this phrase was disordered because the word small. It should be small round precedes the word small. It should be small round table, for the rule said that size must precede shape.
- b. The round table which small (meja bundar yang kecil itu) this word group was not only disordered but also undergone the addition of an unnecessary element: which. This element had to be omitted and the order had to be the small round table.
- c. Triangular big table (meja segitiga yang besar itu) this phrase was also disordered, the word big states size while the word triangular states shape. So, the order should be big triangular table.
- d. Triangular table which big (meja segitiga yang besar itu) the word which in the words group was unnecessary. It had to be omitted and the remained words should be ordered as in (3) above.

- e. Triangular big table (meja segitiga yang besar itu) this phrase was also disordered. The word big states size and thus, it should precede the triangular, stating shape.
- f. The mans whose responsibility improves the serves ( laki-laki yang bertanggung jawab terhadap peningkatan pelayanan itu) this phrase was also disordered.

2. Addition of Unnecessary Elements

Some noun phrases produced by the respondents undergo the addition of unnecessary elements, as respectively discussion below:

1. Girls is sitting beside me (perempuan yang sedang duduk disamping saya)

This words group undergone both the addition of an unnecessary element and the omission of a necessary element. The word was not necessary to that group while an article or indefinite article, it is necessary. The word was should be omitted while the article form of the group. So, the correct form of the group should be the girl sitting beside me.

2. Book is on the table (buku-buku di atas meja itu)

Based on the source written in bracket, the translation produced by the respondent was not equivalent in term of meaning. The respondents produced sentence, the translation above was grammatically correct. However speaking of noun phrases, it was not acceptable for it undergone the addition of an unnecessary element. This in which book is the head of the group and on the table is a prepositional phrase functioning as the post-modifier in the group.

3. The tall and thin boy (laki-laki yang tinggi dan kurus itu)

The word in the group was unnecessary since it caused the phrase had two meanings. Such the phrase as the thin and tall boy means both the tall boy and the thin one. Beside, a phrase had to only one meaning unit.

4. The book are in the library (buku-buku di perpustakaan itu)

The respondents seemed to produce a sentence rather than a noun phrase. The word are in the translation above becomes the verb of the subject the books. The words were is actually unnecessary in the group. So, it should be omitted.

5. Man is walking over there (lelaki yang sedang berjalan di seberang sana)

The words in the group above were unnecessary when making a noun phrase using gerund/present participial phrase as post-modifier. So, the word is should be omitted. However, the word could be necessary when making a noun phrase using relative clause as post-modifier, as in the man who is walking over there.

6. The ideas which had been show in the meeting (ide-ide yang telah ditampilkan dalam rapat itu). This phrase was also addition because it was necessary in the clause.

3. Omission of Necessary Elements

Some translations produced by the respondents were incorrect. They undergone the omission of necessary elements, as respectively discussed in the following:

1. Very handsome boy (laki-laki yang sangat tampan itu)

The orders of this words group were correct. When standing alone, the noun phrase was acceptable. However, the source of the target above was derived from a complete sentence, as in the following; laki-laki yang sangat tampan itu adalah teman saya. When the italic part of this sentence was translated, article the should be used. So, we should translate it as the very handsome boy. The article was a necessary element, and therefore, it should not be absent.

2. Book on the table (buku yang di atas meja itu)

The original of this translation was derived from the following: buku yang di atas mejaitu adalah milik saya. The word itu in the source is a determiner in Indonesia, which was equivalent to the determiner the in English. Hence, the translation should be the book on the table. The article was necessary in the group.

3. Big triangle table (meja segitiga yang besar itu)

This word group should also be preceded by the article the. The correct translation should be the big triangle table.

4. The first change (kesempatan pertama)

This word group also undergone the omission of necessary elements: the. The source said: anda harus tampil dengan baik pada kesempatan pertama. This source was satisfactorily translated as you had to perform your best at the first chance.

5. Lesson that must be written (pelajaran yang harus disalin)

The source said, pelajaran yang harus disalin adalah bab 5 dan 6.

As the source was in context, the noun phrase should be produced as it was used in the context. The source could be translated in two ways. The first was by using that clause as post modifier, and second was by using infinitive phrase as post-modifier. For this two ways of translating, the article should be used, for the necessity of grammar, as in the following:

1) That clause as post-modifiers

The lesson that must be written is chapter five and six.

2) Infinitive phrase as post-modifier

The lesson to write is chapter five and six

6. Lesson that must be followed (pelajaran yang harus diikuti)

This word group had the same problem as that in above. The source could be translated in two ways in which both ways had to use article the, as follows:

1) The lesson that must be followed/attended

2) The lesson to follow/attend

7. The Alphabet consist of twenty six letters ( abjad yang terdiri atas 26 hurup). The source could be translated use article the.

4. Diction

Some translation produced by the students mistakes concerning with diction. Those mistakes produced by the respondents were as follows:

1. A very interesting place

The word place should be sight, for the source was pemandangan, not tempat

2. The two operation tools (kedua alat bedah itu)

The operation should be surgical, for the source was bedah, not operasi. To do an operation did not mean to do a surgery, but to do a surgery means, but to do a surgery means to do an operation. In this case, the word operation had broader sense than surgery. In word, surgery was more specific than operation. The correct translation should be the two surgical instruments.

3. High and thin boy

The word high should be tall. Literally, high and tall had the same meaning that was tinggi in Indonesia. However, the two terms were different in use. For a classification, let's compare the following:

- 1) The man is very tall.
- 2) The mountain is very high.
- 3) The tree is so tall that you cannot climb it.
- 4) The electric lamp is so high that you cannot reach it.

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSIONS AND SUGGETIONS

A. Conclusions

Based on the findings presented in the previous chapter, the researcher concluded that the types of MA DDI Padang Lampe Kecamatan Ma'rang Kabupaten Pangkep in translating Indonesia noun phrases into English were as following:

1. The students had difficulties in disordering the elements of both pre-modifiers and post-modifiers. For example lesson must be written followed. But the student jus write “the student must be written”
2. The students had difficulties in finding the correct elements of both pre-modifiers and post-modifiers or they added unnecessary elements, on the one hand and omit necessary elements, on the other.
3. The students had difficulties in diction. Diction refered to the choice of appreciate words or terms to convey an precise meaning

B. Suggestions

Based on the findings as the conclusions above, the researcher suggests that:

1. The students should be guided to translate from Indonesia noun phrases into English more then from English into Indonesia in other to familiarize them with the orders of pre-modifiers.

2. The students should be trained to construct noun phrases and noun clauses, and how to change them from each other.
3. The students should be trained to construct English noun phrases using a noun phrase and noun clauses as post-modifiers.
