CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

This chapter presents the background, problem statement, and objective of research, significance of research and scope of research.

A. *Background

Advertisement has been familiar for all people in the world include Indonesian because advertisement becomes a way to get information about products or services.

Advertising has been dominated by images of women. Unfortunately, the images of women in most ads portray are usually the creation of art that establish impossible standard of physical perfection for women. Beauty is something that comes from face and body; women are willing to spend money and time on cosmetics. When they cannot conform to an ideal and impossible standard, they go to great length of effort to manipulate and change their faces and bodies (Kuntjara 2004: 99).

Goffman suggests that the most relevant question we can ask of advertisements is: what can advertisements tell us about ourselves. When talk about ourselves it is mean that we talk about identity, either as femininity or masculinity. These expressions of our masculine or feminine identities Goffman called “gender display”. In gender display, it is observed our behaviors, gestures, body postures, ceremonial activities or cultural rituals. He concludes that these nonverbal cues help to define our masculinity and femininity specific for particular culture and therefore interpret the social reality and the best way how to observed our “gender displays” is in advertising images. And this is the reason why pictures seem to be familiar for us. They can be easily read because they show us our “gender display”, our rituals, bits of behavior and gestures in which we engage in real life.

Mass media and women are two things that are related. It is proved by how the media represent women through advertisements. In general, the portrayal of women in the media is sex objects, happy housewives and mothers. In western culture, stereotypically, men are aggressive, competitive and instrumentally oriented while women are passive, cooperative and expressive. (Terman and Miles in Borgatta and Montgomery 2000:3).

A person may label herself female, but instead of seeing herself in a stereotypical female manner such as being expressive, warm, and submissive Ashmore, et al in Borgatta and Montgomery 2000: 3). Three adjectives were identified with females in all cultures—sentimental, submissive, and superstitious and the ideal female characteristics are dependent, submissive, passive, soft, delicate and beautiful.

Female body according to Czikzentmihalyi (2000:267) is symbol of femininity. Femininity is created in society via major agencies of socialization, and is represented and communicated at the symbolic level in the mass media, particularly television commercials.

Communication is related to language because when talk we need language as a tool of communicate with others. Language is not only limited to what people are saying, but also various kinds of sign around us. We can transfer what we feel and what we want to other people by using signs. Sometimes, we do not realize that our life is full of anything and that is called sign (Kusuma 2009: 2). A Signs, according to Barthes, consisted of signifiers (sounds, pictures, and words) and signified (the concept meant by the signifier). Williamson's basic premise is that 'it is part of the deceptive mythology of advertising to believe that an advertisement is a simply a transparent vehicle for a 'message' behind it' (Williamson in Harvey 2011: 2).

This research has purpose to find a few of body cleanser advertisements such as Lux and Giv in television to interpret its pictures by Kang's study of gender advertisement but, this theory come as the conceptual replication of Goffman's study. Lux and Giv are the products of body cleanser that has been familiar and famous in Indonesia and the writer also choose television than magazine or newspaper because; every day most of people spend their time to watching television to get new information. Television advertisements have the advantage of sight, sound, movement and color to persuade a customer to buy a product.

B. *Problem Statement

Based on the reason that has explained above, the writer formulates one following question of research below: How is female portrayed in body cleanser advertisements?

C. *Objective of Research

Based on the problem statement above, the writer states that this research aims is: To examine how female is portrayed in body cleanser advertisements.

D. *Significance of Research

The result of the research is expected for student of Alauddin Islamic State University of Makassar, especially student of English and Literature Department. It is expected that the research can be use as a future reference for the next similar research or to be used as main or second source of student learning about female and gender in advertisement, for lecturer in general and more especially for lecturer of Alauddin Islamic University of Makassar, especially for Department of English and Literature. It is expected that the research can be used as information regarding femininity and gender in advertisement and also can be used as reference and for the consumer of the body cleanser especially who use Lux and Giv. It is expected that the research can be used as information in the future that could help the user to be more understanding about their selves.

E. *Scope of Research

Based on the problem statement above, the writer focused on objective research that is female that portrayed by body cleanser use theory of gender advertisement by Kang. There are many advertisements that used women as the object such as body cleanser, facial foam, hand and body lotion, perfume, etc. That is why the writer due to the limitation of sources, the writer takes body cleanser advertisements, the writer focuses on two body cleanser, and those are Lux and Giv that are shown in television stations. The Lux advertisement has 29 seconds duration and Giv has 29 seconds duration. The writer used Kang's theory who replication the conceptual Goffman's study of gender advertisement to identify female's character that portrayed by those body cleanser products.

CHAPTER II

REVIEW OF RELATED LITERATURE

This chapter presents the previous findings, and some pertinent ideas. Pertinent ideas are divided into: 1). Advertising, 2). Female portrayal in advertising, 3). Goffman's method, 4). Semiotics Theory and 5). Islamic point of view

A. *Previous findings

This research is not the only researches that aim to analyze female portrayals through body cleanser advertisements. Nevertheless, it needs to be emphasis here that there are several previous researches that analyzed femininity in television or magazine, and film. Here, the writer will describe those researchers.

Manasova (2010) in her Bachelor thesis with the title "Gender stereotyping in advertisements-the relevance of Goffman's study for contemporary advertising." This Bachelor Thesis focused on identification of gender stereotypical expressions in Czech print advertisements. The theoretical basis for this work is Goffman's study from 1979 which deals with unequal relationships between men and women and their social positions in social power hierarchy displayed in advertising images. A total of 300 randomly selected advertisements from Czech lifestyle magazines were examined by using Goffman's framework. Further, individual gender stereotypes were analysed and compare with Goffman's findings. The results showed that although some of the Goffman's categories are disappearing, traditional negative and unequal representation of women still dominate in Czech print advertisements. The findings revealed that Czech advertising mirror the changes in social gender roles in our society, however, stereotypes described in Goffman's study more than thirty years ago are still prevalent.

Lawton (2009), Gender Advertisement: replication of a classic work examining women, magazines and Facebook photographs. This study, conducted in Goffman's phenomenological tradition, investigates modern commercial advertisements to update Goffman's work and determine the presence of a new phenomenon, the mechanization of women. Advertisements were collected and studied based on Goffman's five coding categories: relative size, feminine touch, function ranking, ritualization of subordination, and licensed withdrawal. In addition, Facebook photographs were analyzed based on the same coding categories to find whether women portray themselves in personal yet publically available photographs in the same way as women are displayed by others in advertising images. The results indicate that modern advertisements portray women in much the same manner as in the 1979 advertisements from Goffman's original study, and evidence can be found that supports a new advertising pattern of the mechanization of women. However, in Facebook photographs, women tend to display themselves with greater individuality than the way they are portrayed in commercial advertisements. These findings have greater implications on the future of gender displays in advertising and women's selfportrayal, particularly in relation to the creation of a new feminist movement.

Both of the previous studies have similarity toward the writer's research. Both of them have focus on gender especially in female or women. But, on the other side there are also differences between them and those are in Manasova's research, she focuses in gender stereotyping in magazine advertisements while in this research, the writer just focuses on female in television advertisements. In Lawton's research, she focuses in the portrayal of women in magazine advertisements and Facebook while the writer will focus on female in body cleanser advertisements on television.

B. Advertising

Advertising exists "to help to sell things" (White, 2000: 5), which is limited to giving utilitarian information about the product with the objective of informing the consumer about the necessity and the importance of the commodity advertised.

Beside that, according to Sheehan (2004: 2-3) to advertise means "to give notice, to inform, to notify or to make known". He goes on and suggests that a successful advertisement should include 'information', 'reasoning' and 'emphases. He means that advertisers should not only inform their audiences about the product, but also stimulate ideas among them as well as developing their curiosity and interests through creating new meanings from the advertised commodity.

Through images, verbal language or symbols, consumers come to identify themselves with the merits and significance of the advertised product in their everyday life. In other words, advertising is about information, but it is also about ‘appearances’; “advertising is not just about the objects’ appearance but about personal appearances: how we look at others, how we think of ourselves” (Barthel, 1988: 1). Hence, advertising according to Barthel is about creating a relationship between subject and object, which means between the product and the meaning or the value, it brings to its buyer - the meaning the product carries, which the buyer wishes to appropriate.

In western countries society, economy and business are closely associated with culture; culturally shared meanings are often created and shaped in market environment (Moisander and Valtonen 2006: 21). Lin and Kulik (2002: 117) suggest that advertising reflects the contemporary socio-cultural reality of certain society but simultaneously and continuously shapes societal and cultural values. Marketers and advertisers can be considered as cultural gatekeepers, who not only shape their products and services to meet the current expectations of consumers but also create new needs and wants by shaping the expectations of consumers (Lin and Yeh 2009: 63). Bordo (1993: 20) agrees that media images are both representations and reproducers of culture (Joy and Venkatesh 1994: 335).

Strinati in Kujala (2012: 21) argues that advertising is one of the most visible expressers of culture, in which reality and illusion are difficult to distinguish from one another (Percy and Elliott 2009: 21). Lin and Yeh (2009: 337) suggest that advertisements provide a mix of cultural meanings, societal values and personal dreams to reflect the wants and needs of individuals. Advertising can also be considered as a powerful form of propaganda that controls and shapes one's consciousness and perceptions of oneself, self-image and society and changes individuals' behaviors, attitudes and preferences (Percy and Elliott 2009: 22). Advertising can, thus, be considered to have a major role in the formation of culturally and socially accepted norms, such as beauty standards (Lin and Yeh 2009: 340). Buttle in Kujala (2012: 22) agrees that advertising constructs realities and shapes individuals' attitudes, values and sense of self and, in addition, provides consumers with role models (Percy and Elliott 2009: 22). It guides consumers with hints of what is "needed" – needed to be feminine or masculine, for example (Lin and Yeh 2009: 343). The cultural context would, according to McCracken in Kujala (2012: 22), be incomprehensible without these instructions provided by advertising.

Most of the studies agreed to varying degrees with the work done by Courtney and Lockeretz in Shrikande (2003: 11) who found that women were portrayed with four distinct characteristics: 1) A woman's place is in the home; 2) women do not make important decisions or do important things; 3) women are dependent and need men protection; 4) men regard women primarily as sexual objects and are not interested in women as people.

C. Female portrayal in advertising

Next, female portrayal and common characteristics of the female depiction in advertising during 1960-1990s and from 1990 until today are introduced.

1960-1990s

Women's role and status, as well as gender roles, constantly evolve and change in society (Solomon et al. 2006: 35). One of the most powerful turning points relating to gender roles emerged during the 1960's as women began to take part into labor force (Zimmerman and Dahlberg 2008: 75). Along with this women's movement towards workforce, interest towards studying the depiction of women in advertising as well as attitudes of women towards this female depiction increased significantly in the field of research and science in general (Zimmerman and Dahlberg 2008:75).

Despite its significance towards the gender role assumptions in society, women's shift to workforce was relatively weakly reflected in advertising (Lundstrom and Schglimpaglia 1977: 74). In fact, at the time of women's labor movement in 1960's and 1970's the depiction of women in certain stereotypical gender roles in advertising actually had just emerged (Beetles and Harris 2005: 400). Most common female stereotypes presented in advertising during 1960s and 1970s were 1) housewife, 2) decorative object, 3) sex object and 4) dependent on man (Ferguson et al. 1990: 44).

2000-2010s

Some researchers argue that the depiction of women in traditional stereotypical gender roles and professions continues even today. Plakoyiannaki et al. (2008: 108) noticed that of contemporary online advertisements, over 50% portray women as decorative or sex objects and 18% in other traditional roles such as housewife or mother. Solomon et al. (2006: 37), however, argue that traditional stereotype and gender role portrayals in advertising are decreasing and gradually stepping aside. Examples of this shift are role reversal and role switching; women absorbing roles and professions traditionally associated with men and vice versa (Solomon et al. 2006: 37). Some even criticize today's advertising of over-replacing women's traditional working roles; women portrayed in a work setting are nowadays depicted often exclusively in glamorous, successful manager positions instead of providing a variety of working roles of different positions in female media depiction (Solomon et al. 2006: 37).

Three repetitive characteristics in female depiction can be found in today's western advertising; thinness, whiteness and sexiness.

The third characteristic of female portrayal in advertising is the use of sex, which has continuously been criticized by different groups within past decades (Zimmerman and Dahlberg 2008: 77). The trend is apparent, for example, in an increase in sexual objectification of women (Reichert et al. 2007: 83). Sexual objectification implies being treated and portrayed as body or body part meant for the use and pleasure of others (Fredrickson and Roberts 1997: 175). As sex is such a dominant feature in today's advertising, current media research has also gotten more focused on depictions of sex instead of traditional gender role portrayals (Beetles and Harris 2005: 401). Mass media and advertising specifically are criticized of being one of the most powerful purveyors of not only beauty ideals, but sexuality in general, in today's western society (Gill 2009: 138).

Some recent feminist movements argue that women in media are portrayed as independent and confident, consciously expressing their sexual power and self-consciousness and, instead of passive objects meant to serve the male gaze are portrayed as active, desirable subjects who decide to objectify themselves because they have a freedom to do so (Gill 2009:139).

The sexualized female images are thus seen as enjoying one's own attractiveness and sexuality (Gill 2009: 139). However, Gill (2009:139) argues that only white, young, thin and attractive women are entitled to this independent, self-conscious sexual power. Additionally, she criticizes the current advertising trend of "hot lesbianism", of that, despite the seeming independency, power and encouragement to "be who you are" in terms of sexual orientation, these "hot lesbians", based on their femininity, attractiveness and beauty are mainly directed to male gaze and are often portrayed in close contact with another woman, either a full opposite (white and black woman) or significantly similar one (twins), further indicating that the depiction of a lesbian woman in advertising is, in fact, based on the lesbian fantasy of a heterosexual male, serving the male, patriarchal purposes.

D. Goffman's Method

Goffman's method for decoding gender behaviour uses every little detail of daily life. In his provocative analysis of nearly 500 advertisements he concentrates on very subtle signs of our social interaction, mainly the gestures, eye contact, posture of hands, facial expressions etc. He states that the most innocent gestures, familiar rituals, or taken-for-granted forms of address enhanced understanding of the relations between males and females. He designed following categories to measure gender stereotyping in advertising images: (1) Relative Size, (2) The Feminine Touch, (3) Function Ranking, (4) The Ritualization of Subordination, (5) Licensed Withdrawal. He argued that these categories are indicative of gender differences in "social weight," that is social power, influence, and authority. But Kang in 1997 add 2 categories as the conceptual replication of Goffman's study (6) body display, and (7) self-assrtiveness.

1. Relative Size

Social weight, specifically power, authority, rank, office, and renown are often expressed through "relative size". Goffman suggested that men are regularly pictured above women. Male "relative size" over females in the picture reflects traditional cultural attitudes of male power and authority over females.

When a woman is pictured taller than men, it is usually indication of her higher social status (doctor and patient).

2. The Feminine Touch

Another category may appear as trivial, but, in fact, it supports the idea that women are vulnerable and non-assertive. According to Goffman, women's hands are rarely depicted engaged in practical, utilitarian activity. Rather than using the whole hand they are more likely to use just the ends of the fingers and hold the objects delicately and lightly. In contrary, men are depicted grasping, squeezing, manipulating or gripping objects. Goffman calls this pattern in the representation of female hands "The Feminine Touch." The soft, delicate, caressing touch (Goffman calls it "ritualistic touching") conveys the idea that the product being caressed is "precious and desirable." Sometimes, we can find a variation of self-touching, when a woman is gently touching different parts of their bodies, their hands, face, neck or hips and showing her body as precious product or something that needs support.

3. Function Ranking

Whereas men are shown in a relatively wide variety of social roles and activities, women are more often restricted to domestic and subordinating roles. In fact, they are often underrepresented in advertisements or performing less meaningful roles. When men and women appear together in an advert, men are more likely to be portrayed as experts or leaders. According to Goffman, sometimes, even in advertisements aimed at female audience, selling product such as household goods, males are depicted in executive roles, often teaching or instructing women. When women appear in a traditionally male task, such as fixing a car, the man is presented to “parenthesize the activity, looking on appraisingly, condescendingly, or with wonder.”

4. Licensed Withdrawal

Goffman state that women, more than men, may seem as not paying attention to what is happening around them. They tend to be pictured physically or mentally removed or withdrawn from the social situation and appear to be disoriented. This leaves women dependent on the protection of others. Men, by contrast, seem to control the situation and stay alert and ready for potential threats.

Women are also often presented as losing their control in strong emotional situations and use their hands to cover the mouth or the whole face. Furthermore, similarly to children, in some situations when dealing with uncomfortable feelings, such as shyness, fear or embarrassment, women tend to use their fingers to suck or bite them.

Another form of this category can be found when women and men appear in some euphoric state. Women are more likely to be exhibiting a more expansive expression than men, which Kant called “expansive smile.”

5. The Ritualization of Subordination

Another example demonstrating women’s subordination is presented in “The Ritualization of Subordination.” Goffman states that women are often depicted as lying down in vulnerable position, while men look alert and ready to respond to or to initiate action. Such poses explicitly communicate submission and dependency of women. Firstly, placing her in such a position gives her no defense against possible threats and makes her completely powerless. Secondly, women appearing in such powerless positions often signalize they are sexually available for men.

Another way how women express their submissiveness is through “the bashful knee-bend.” He calls it “canting” postures – meaning the body is tilted – positions that take the body away from being upright and perpendicular and places people off-centre. Similarly to the other submissive positions, “the bashful knee-bend” leaves women in vulnerable or sexualized position.

Finally, Goffman again proved that women are “saved from seriousness.” He argues that while men have to act seriously and look dignified in all kind of situations, women tend to show playful “clowning.” Acting, posing, playing like children, women cannot be taken seriously.

6. Body Display

Sometimes magazine advertisements show little stereotyping of women in terms of relative size, feminine touch, function ranking, ritualization of subordination, and licensed withdrawal, while the female models show high degree of nudity which is another important way of stereotyping. This category was introduced to compare the level of female model’s body display between the two years. The dress of the models in the 1979 and 1991 advertisements are analyzed to see whether the female wears body-revealing clothes or shows nudity. Body-revealing clothes include mini-skirts, tight skirts or evening gowns which expose cleavage, “short”-shorts, “see-through” clothes, halter dress, or bathing suits. Nudity is defined as unclothed models, including models translucent under apparel and lingerie, models depicted with no clothing. “close-up” shots where the shoulders of the models are bare are considered as nudity

7. Independence and self-assertiveness

The analysis of stereotyping in print advertisements can be approached from a different perspective here. Instead of focusing on the more manifest content an advertisement, the focal point here is the more subtle representation of an ad that provide important clues to gender relations. In addition to centering on such details as the use of the hands, facial expressions, body positioning, and relative sizes of men and women in print advertisements, one should look at the “big picture” to obtain overall message of an ad. This category was added to evaluate female model’s overall image in terms of independence and self-assertiveness.

E. Semiotic Theory

Semiotic comes from Greek language, “Semeion” means sign. Sign is something which had represents other thing based on social convention. Term of semeion was derived from hipocratic or aspeladic within concerned on syptomatology and inferensial diagnostic. In the time, sign means something which has represented to other thing. Semiotic is an analysis method to explore more about sign and everything which has relation with sign (Sobur, 2002: 95).

The role of semiotics is to study the relationships between signs and the objects, ideas, events, and meanings that they stand for, and also to understand how signs produce other signs that determining meaning that translate into the actions of interpreters. Semiotics is descriptive, but it does not resolve the issues communicated by the subject of its observations. Rather, semiotics can illuminate the processes that communicate and produce meanings, describe the limits of knowledge expressed through certain processes, and facilitate critical discourse about the certainty of what can be known (Gayness, 2010: 23).

Media literacy is largely about reading and understanding the signs that the media produce and manipulate. The media are engaged in signifying practices, “a kind of symbolic work” that gives meaning to things and communicates that meaning to someone else (Hall, 1997: 14). The main purpose of media semiotics is to learn how the mass media create or adapt sign to its aim. These are the following question to get the point of it: (1). what is the purposed or representated by something; (2). How is the meaning described; (3). Why it has meaning as its performed (Danesi, 2010: 40). Media literacy practices, then, use semiotic theory to sort out the sign systems used and produced by the mass media, and to interpret what those systems mean.

Modern semiotic analysis can be said to have begun with two men—Swiss linguist Ferdinand de Saussure (1857–1913) and American philosopher Charles Sanders Peirce (1839–1914) (Berger, 2004: 4). Both are different background.

Peirce is a philosopher and Saussure is linguistic expert. This difference was being on applying concept. Also, there are two schools from this difference. The first group is following Peirce thought that did not take the basic thought from language science. The second group is following Saussure thought with language science as the basic thought (Khoirul, 2013: 18).

Based on the explanation above, the writer concludes that semiotics is a scientific study of signs, how people produces and interprets the signs, so how the media represents the signs. In this research, the writer takes semiotics of Pierce that his theory will be used to analyze the portrayal of female in body cleanser advertisements.

The American founder of semiotics, the philosopher C. S. Peirce, distinguished between three basic kinds of sign. There was the 'iconic', where the sign somehow resembled what it stood for (a photograph of a person, for example); the 'indexical', in which the sign is somehow associated with what it is a sign of (smoke with fire, spots with measles), and the 'symbolic', where as with Saussure the sign is only arbitrarily of conventionally linked with its referent. Semiotics takes up this and many other classifications: it distinguishes between 'denotation' (what the sign stands for) and 'connotation' (other signs associated with it); between codes (the rule-governed structures which produce meanings) and the messages transmitted by them; between the 'paradigmatic' (a whole class of signs which may stand in for one another) and the 'syntagmatic' (where signs are coupled together with each other in a 'chain') (Ellengton, 2003:87-88).

According to Peirce, sign can be identified by view the relation to the referent. The manner is understanding relation among sign, referent, and interpretant. These relations belonging to unlimited process which has stopped in the one meaning, but the signification still continuing based the interpretant knowledge. This process namely semiosis process. Semiosis is signification meaning in the thirdness staggered is index, icon, and symbol. Index is relation between signifier and signified from resemblance. Icon is relation between signifier and signified from causality relation. Symbol is relation between signifier and signified based on social convection (Sobur, 2002: 148).

Peirce incorporates this idea into his own three-part model of the sign.

- a. Peirce's model included two parts similar to Saussure's signifier and signified.
- b. Peirce's representamen, often called the sign vehicle, is the form of the sign in sound or image.
- c. The interpretant is the sense made of the sign. The interpretant is a mental construct, or in Peirce's words, "an equivalent sign or perhaps a more developed sign." (Peirce, 1991: 141.)

To these two parts, Peirce added a third that he called the object, something that exist “out there.” The sign is “a unity of what is represented (the object), how it is represented (the sign vehicle) a how it is interpreted (the interpretant)” (Chandler, 2002: 29).

The sign according to Pierce is the unity from representament, object and interpretant. The basic principle is a sign has representative character. It means a sign as representation of something (Khoirul, 2013:23).

A sign, or representament, is something which stands to somebody for something in some respect or capacity. It addresses somebody, that is, creates in the mind of that person an equivalent sign, or perhaps a more developed sign. That sign which to creates I call the interpretant of the first sign. The sign stands for something, its object. It stands for that object, not in all respects, but in the reference to a sort of idea (Noth, 1995: 42).

The interpretant, then, is the idea a person has of the object when he or she sees the sign vehicle. Interpretant is sign which is being on human’s mind about object. Interpretant has important role in the interpretation between representament and object. So, sign not only representative character, but also interpretative. Sign is something which stands to somebody for something in same respect or capacity.

According to Peirce in Khoirul (2013: 24), sign is part of object and interpretant (understanding of subject to sign).

And say to the believing women that they cast down their looks and guard their private parts and do not display their ornaments except what appears there of and let them wear their head coverings over their bosoms, and not display their ornaments to their husbands, or their fathers, or the fathers of their husbands, or their sons, or the sons of their husbands, or their brothers, or their brother's sons, or their sister's sons, or their women, or those whom their right hands possess, or the male servants not having need(of women), or the children who have not attained knowledge of what is hidden of women; let them not strike their feet so that what they hide of their ornaments may be known; and turn to Allah all of you, O believers! So, that you may be successful.

3. Surah Al-Ahzab: 59

يَا أَيُّهَا النَّبِيُّ قُلْ لِّأَزْوَاجِكَ وَبَنَاتِكَ وَنِسَاءِ الْمُؤْمِنِينَ يُدْنِينَ عَلَيْهِنَّ مِنْ جَلَابِيبِهِنَّ ذَلِكَ أَدْنَى أَنْ يُعْرَفْنَ فَلَا يُؤْذَيْنَ وَكَانَ اللَّهُ غَفُورًا رَحِيمًا

O prophets! Say to your wives and your daughters and the women of the believers that they let down upon them their over-garments; this will be more proper, that they may be known, and thus they will not be given trouble; and Allah is forgiving, merciful.

4. Hadits Muslim 2668

"Indeed Asma bint Abu Bakr entered the house of the Prophet using thin clothing, the Prophet turned away and said: 'O Asma, in fact if a woman has stepped up (menstruation), then it should not be seen from her except this and this, while he pointed to the face and the palm of his hand ". (HR. Abu Dawood, Hadith Hasan Lighairihi [3], have witnessed issued by Al Baihaqi from Ibn road Lahee'ah of 'Iyadl bin Abdilllah [4])

This Hadith shows two things:

- a. Woman's obligation to cover the entire body except the face and palms.
- b. Thin clothing are not eligible to cover nakedness.

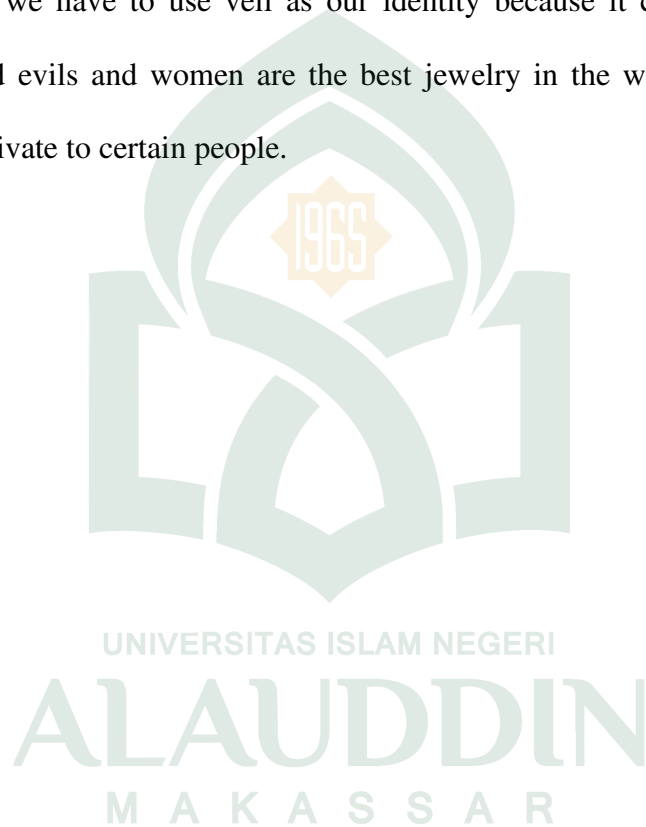

6. HR. Muslim no. 3971 and no. 5098 of Abu Hurairah

أَنَّ كَاسِيَاتٍ عَارِيَّاتٍ صِنْفَانِ مِنْ أَهْلِ النَّارِ لَمْ أَرَهُمَا قَوْمٌ مَعَهُمْ سِيَاطٌ كَأَذْنَابِ الْبَقَرِ يَضْرِبُونَ بِهَا النَّاسَ وَنِسَاءٌ

 كَذًا وَكَذًا

"... There are two classes of people who became residents of hell, which I had never suspected. Which is a group of people who have a whip-like tail cattle used to harm mankind. And women who are dressed but naked (clad thin / transparent / tight), wiggle catwalk and posing, head (decorated) like a camel's hump. They cannot go to heaven and did not smell it. Though heaven can smell wafted from the travel distance so and so (a distant relative) "( HR. Muslim no. 3971 and no. 5098 of Abu Hurairah)

Based on the three ayahs and hadiths above, we can conclude that as women of Muslim; we have to use veil as our identity because it can guard us from troubles and evils and women are the best jewelry in the world. We only can show our private to certain people.

CHAPTER III

RESEARCH METHODOLOGY

This chapter presents the method of research, data sources, instrument of research, procedure of data collection and data analysis technique.

A. *Research Method

The approach that used in this research is qualitative approach. Parkinson and Drislane in (Gregory 2012: 2) state that qualitative research is research using methods such as participant observation or case studies which result in a narrative, descriptive account of a setting or practice. In this research the writer will collect the data from the main data source, which is in this research is picture of body cleanser products and data will be classify based on the Kang's theory of gender advertisement to see the portrayals of female through body cleanser advertisements.

B. *Data Source

In this research, the writer took the data which are the pictures of body cleanser advertisements. The writer watched the video Lux and Giv advertisement that are presented in television stations at 2015 but downloaded the video from Youtube. Because, in this research the writer analyzed picture so, the video converted into picture format.

C. Instrument of Research

In the process of collecting data, the writer used observation. Observation is one of the very important methods for obtaining comprehensive data in qualitative research especially when a composite both oral and visual data become vital to the research (Annum, 2015:3).

D. Procedure of Data Collection

There are several steps that the writer of this research would take in order to collecting the data:

To collect the data, the writer downloaded the advertisements in the Youtube. Thus, after downloaded them; the writer converted them into JPG (Joint Photographic Group) format by using DVD video software. After that the writer classified the picture into seven categories according to Kang's theory in the advertisements that related to the female portrayals.

After collecting the data, the writer sorts out the data to find the proper data that had analyzed. As the focus of this research, it was analyzed the female portrayals through body cleanser advertisements. The writer classified the picture into seven categories according to Kang's theory in the advertisements that related to the female portrayals.

E. Technique of Data Analysis

Technique of analysis data that used in this research is Kang's theory as the conceptual replication of Goffman's study. There are seven categories of gender advertising that the researcher will use for analyze the advertisements. They are relative size, feminine touch, function ranking, the ritualization of subordination and licensed withdrawal, body display and independence and self-assertiveness.

CHAPTER IV

FINDINGS AND DISCUSSION

This chapter presents the findings analysis, and discussions of the research. Findings are arranged in the tables.

A. *Findings

This part is focused on the findings to answer the research questions which in the table form. The table consists 11 pictures to answer the problem statement. In the data the writer gave name of body cleanser products and Sec to explain the second of the act. Representament is the form of the sign in sound or image. Object is something that exists “out there.” Interpretant is sign which is being on human’s mind about object.

Female is presented in body cleanser advertisements.

1. Relative Size.

Social situation is expressed through the relative size of the persons in the advertisements, with men showing their superiority through their girth and height.

5. Body display

Body display related to body-revealing clothes or nudity. Body-revealing clothes include mini-skirts, tight skirts or evening gowns which expose cleavage, "short"-shorts, "see-through" clothes, halter dress, or bathing suits. Nudity is defined as unclothed models, including models translucent under apparel and lingerie, models clothed in nothing except a towel, or models depicted with no clothing. "Close-up" shots where the shoulders of the models are bare are considered as nudity.

B. Discussion

In this part, the writer explain the portray of female through body cleanser advertisements (Lux and Giv)

Female represents through body cleanser advertisements

According to Kang's theory, there are seven categories of gender advertisement that related to gender stereotypes but, in this research the writer just finds five categories of gender advertisements which there are in Lux and Giv.

A. Relative size.

According to Goffman (1979), higher physical position is associated with higher social status and superiority and lower physical position with lower social status and submissiveness. Male “relative size” over females in this sense is the most obvious index of power which. It reflects traditional cultural attitudes of male power and authority over females. This category also examines whether the women in the images were portrayed as sexually dominant or submissive.

Relative size only applies on advertisements that picture both men and women. We can show it in the Datum 1 and Datum 2 how the pictures figure out the feminine touch.

Datum 1, there is a couple (husband and wife) that stand facing each other and look happy. The picture shows that the man is taller than woman.

Sometimes everything that happens in the advertisement is different with the real life because advertisements have own style in represent something or someone. But for Datum 1, relative size is also showed in the real life or in our society where men are also showed taller than women. This position emphasizes that men are superior to women or men have authority than women.

According to Kang (1997), when the man is taller than woman means that the man is powerful and it means that the man can protect the woman and for the woman this position means that woman needs protection.

Women in the reality are always pictured shorter than men. It indicates that women are weak or powerless and need men's protection. On the other side, men are always pictured taller than women. It indicates that men have power and authority than women. "Tall" is something that reference to the powerful and superior.

In Islamic point of view, men and women are equal. Based on the Hadith that the writer has told before either men or women, they can be in hell. It is depend on their deeds when they life in the world. Especially for women, if they want to avoid in hell, they must became a good Muslimah or Muslimah shalihah because most of people in hell are women.

Datum 2, there are man and woman that meet in the road where the woman is artist and the man is fans of her. The man is so excited to meet with her; we can see the expressions of that man. He looks shock and like want to take a picture with her. In other side, the picture also shows that the woman is higher than the man.

In the real life or in our society, women are never showed taller than men because in our society's norm, men should be taller than women. This position wants to show that men have power.

According to Kang (1997), the women can be taller than men in certain situation such as doctor and patient, teacher and student, artist and fans, etc. in this advertisement the woman is taller than man because the woman is an artist and the man is fans of the artist.

In Islamic point of view, men and women are same. We cannot judge someone by looked at him or her physic. When men are showed taller than women, it does not mean anything because physic is not standard to judge that someone has big power.

Based on the explanation above, the writer concludes that in the relative size is women can be showed taller than men when in different social status and when the woman show shorter than man it means that the man is powerful and has authority over the woman.

B. The Feminine Touch

Although the focus on hand might not seem the most burning issue to be tackled on the question of representation of femininity and masculinity in advertising images, Goffman pays particular attention to the way how men and women use their hands and how they treat the objects or products which are promoting. This category was most often shown in messages promoting beauty products for women as a kind of gentle self-touching of the body, or specific parts such as hips, hair or face. Females are frequently posing while “using their fingers and hands to trace the outlines of an object, or to cradle it or to caress its surface. Goffman calls this pattern in the representation of female hands "the feminine touch". The soft, delicate, caressing touch (Goffman calls it "ritualistic touching") conveys the idea that the product being caressed is precious and desirable. We can show it in the Datum 3 and Datum 4 how the pictures figure out the feminine touch.

Datum 3, the picture shows the woman hold the object and in around the objects there are many roses that indicate that the product is the result of the extraction of the roses.

According to Kang (1997), when the women hold the object, it conveys the idea that the product is precious and desirable. Hold the object assigned as an inherently feminine characteristic perpetuates the biased notion that women by nature are weak, docile, and lack control of their environment.

The writer always see that in daily life that most of women like hold something, especially something that they think that it is precious thing.

Datum 4, the picture shows that when the woman had took a bath, her skin become soft. We can identify this from the way that woman uses her hand in touch her body.

In real life or our society, most of women like to touch their skin to show that they have white and soft skin, that is why the advertisements always represent that gesture to make the consumer are interested with their product.

According to Kang (1997), the women touch her body known as “self-touching”, put hand on the shoulder. This portrays the women as soft, and their body as delicate and fragile, as a “precious thing.”

The woman touch her body to show that it is precious while in Islamic point of view, women’s body are precious that is why they have to close it by using dress of Muslimah.

Based on the explanation above, the writer concludes that the feminine touch is how the woman uses hand to hold or touch whether part of bodies or the objects.

C. Licensed Withdrawal

Rather than being portrayed as active, powerful and in charge, females are commonly shown in this licensed withdrawal mode, removed into internal involvements, overcome with emotions, or symbolically silenced with hand over the mouth. This involved with some inner emotional processing, whether anxiety, ecstasy or introspection, can be symbolized by turning the face away, looking dreamy and introverted, or by covering the face, particularly the mouth, with the hands.

Eye contact and facial expression are particularly in attention here. Most of our gestures or facial expressions are socially learned and part of our socializing process when we learn about what is socially acceptable or unacceptable for our gender identity in our society. Therefore facial expressions, particularly using our emotions and eye contact might vary from culture to culture.

Goffman (1979) suggested that in general, women more than men lose control over their emotion which is successfully exploited in advertisements. This was mostly demonstrated by euphoric feelings which can be called “expansive smiles”. We can show it in the Datum 5 and Datum 6 how the pictures figure out the licensed withdrawal.

Datum 5, the picture shows that the woman is happy. We can identify the happiness of the woman by look at her smile. The man also shows that he is happy because he gives smile to the woman but it different with the woman' smile, the woman shows the expansive smile.

In real life or our society, women are always stereotyped more expressive than men and the advertisers exploit that into the advertisements.

According to Kang (1997), women are more expressive than men to show her feeling and emotion. This was mostly demonstrated by euphoric feelings which can be called “expansive smiles”.

One thing that beautiful from the women is smile. Smile is one of the ways to reveal our feeling. As we know that women are people who can hide their feeling, expression and emotion. They always want to show what they feel to the others.

In Islamic point of view, smile is the easier alms that you can give to your sisters.

Datum 6, the woman smiles and puts her fingers close to the mouth.

In real life, when women put her fingers close to the mouth, it means that she is shy and like a child. It also happens in advertisement.

According to Kang (1997), when the women use her fingers and put it close to mouth, it shows that the woman is shy. Women are more likely to be depicted with a finger brought to the mouth, sucking or biting it, as do little children. This can imply confusion, anxiety, shy or being lost in thought or not thinking at all.

Based on the explanation above, the writer concludes that licensed withdrawal is how the woman uses their feeling, emotional and expression.

D. The ritualization of subordination.

According to Kang (1997), a woman more likely than a man, lowers herself physically; she often appears as lying or sitting in vulnerable positions, off-balance or insecure. These images are often associated with strong sexual symbolism and sexual objectification and unlike the previous “The Feminine Touch” it measures more over sexuality. Therefore, this category should examine the degree of explicitly sexual behavior demonstrated in advertisements. Another form of this category is “body clowning”. In this sense, it concentrates primarily on women portrayed as childish and incompetent. Goffman states that while men tend to act seriously and look dignified in all kinds of situations, women tend to act, pose and play like children and therefore are “being saved from seriousness”.

We can show it in the Datum 7, Datum 8 and Datum 9 how the pictures figure out the ritualization of subordination.

Datum 7, the woman takes a bath and shows in bath up. Bath up is furthermore something associated with the clean or pure and as we know that women is more concerned with the cleanness.

According to Goffman (1997), bath up position is when the women take away from being upright and perpendicular and it is subordination position and this position known as “bashful knee-bend”. This position indicates that woman is weak. He specifically mentions that this pose can also be eroticized: “Of course, lying on the floor, bath up or on a sofa or bed seems also to be a conventionalized expression of sexual availability.”

Bath up position is position that most of women do when they take a bath during they have a bath in their house.

Datum 8, there is a couple (husband and wife) that is in kiss position. Kiss is one of the sexual positions and as we know that advertisers show women in advertisement only for object of sexual.

According to Kang (1997), one of position of the ritualization of subordination is kiss position. When an embrace or a kiss is shown, women are most commonly shown leaning back, submitting to the advance. They are shown passively welcoming the attention.

For the writer, kiss position is position that related to the sexuality. When we talk about kiss, we talk about sex because it is so close related each others.

Datum 9, the woman stands in the road and roses are flying around her. She stands in pigeon toes position.

In the real life, pigeon toe is condition which causes the toes to point inward when walking. It is common in infants and young children. If a child is pigeon toed it does not mean there is something wrong with the feet. It just tells which way the toes point when the child or person walks.

According to Kang (1997), the pigeon toes posture is feet in towards each other when walk and it most effective when used by children and women as it is submissive in nature. Men can also use the posture, however, their challenge is finding a sympathetic partner who will read the cue and react in ways that benefit them. That being said, when children and women wish to show submission and lessen punishment or gain special treatment or favours, pointing the toes inward and taking on a smaller profile, is the answer.

Based on the explanation above, the writer concludes that the ritualization of subordination is position of women always in subordination.

E. Body display.

Body display is closely linked to the sexuality of men and women in the images. We can show it in the Datum 10 and Datum 11 how the pictures figure out the body display.

Datum 10, the couple (husband and wife) is standing face each other and in hug position, the woman use evening gowns and the man use formal clothes.

In real life, when man and woman are going to party women often use evening gowns while the men use formal clothes because for adult, party refers to the formal place and that is why they have to use formal clothes to show that they are appreciate it.

According to Kang (1997), the dress of the models that in the advertisements are analyzed to see whether the female wears body-revealing clothes or shows nudity. Body-revealing clothes include mini-skirts, tight skirts or evening gowns which expose cleavage, "short"-shorts, "see-through" clothes, halter dress, or bathing suits. Nudity is defined as unclothed models, including models translucent under apparel and lingerie, models clothed in nothing except a towel, or models depicted with no clothing. "Close-up" shots where the shoulders of the models are bare are considered as nudity.

Most of advertisement show women use mini dress, this indicates that body of women is precious thing that have to show to others. It opposites in Islam point of view, because the body of women is prestigious so it must be close.

In Islamic point of view, the best clothes are god-fearing but for women, they have to close their body with the best Muslimah's dress to protect or guard them from evils.

Datum 11, the women are in the road; she makes a pose to show herself and roses are flying around her. She uses halter dress to show her beautiful body and skin.

In real life, the way women show their body is using a mini dress. It is opposite with Islamic role. In Islamic point of view, the women must close their body by using long dress that does not expose their body.

According to Kang (1997), the dress of the models that in the advertisements are analyzed to see whether the female wears body-revealing clothes or shows nudity. Body-revealing clothes include mini-skirts, tight skirts or evening gowns which expose cleavage, "short"-shorts, "see-through" clothes, halter dress, or bathing suits. Nudity is defined as unclothed models, including models translucent under apparel and lingerie, models clothed in nothing except a towel, or models depicted with no clothing. "Close-up" shots where the shoulders of the models are bare are considered as nudity.

In Islamic point of view, women who are dressed but naked (clad thin / transparent / tight), wiggle catwalk and posing, head (decorated) like a camel's hump. They cannot go to heaven and did not smell it and also just there are two parts of our body that can be seen by others people. The first is hand and the second is face. It means that women are so precious in Islam.

Based on the explanation above, the writer concludes that in the body display woman always want to show up their body through using mini dress.

Based on the findings of problem statement above, the writer concludes that all the categories that found in the advertisements show women as subject of sexuality and in subordination position of men when we correlate it in the real life or in our society, can be said that advertisement is the reflection of our society. In our society, women should have beauty whether in physic or psychology, and white skin. While in Islamic point of view, women are the best jewelry in the world it means that they are more precious than all jewelries that exist in the world. Women should appreciate their self by wearing muslimah's dress because it can protect or guard them from troubles and evils. Besides, those advertisements are not Islamic because the women are pictured as object of sexual while women in Islam are precious.

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

This chapter delivers conclusion and suggestion. After findings the femininity that presented by body cleanser advertisements and the message of women that created in body cleanser advertisement by using Kang's gender advertisement theory, the writer provides some conclusions and suggestions to the readers.

A. CONCLUSION

These are the conclusions from the result of the research, as follows:

There are only five categories of gender advertisement related to the female portrayals that found in the Lux and Giv advertisements as the body cleanser products, those are relative size, the feminine touch, licensed withdrawal, the ritualization of subordination, and body display.

Relative size emphasizes that man is higher than woman as the authority and superiority man over woman, when woman is higher than man; it means that woman has higher social status than woman. Feminine touch emphasizes on all the things that related to touching and holding activity that woman do in advertisements. Licensed withdrawal emphasizes on emotional, feeling and expression of woman in the advertisements. The ritualization of subordination emphasizes on all the position that place the woman on subordination situation. Body display emphasizes on way of the woman revealing her body through wearing clothes.

B. SUGGESTION

1. For the next researchers, the writer suggests to learn more about female and gender stereotypes in advertisement theory to do more specific research.
2. For the readers, the writer suggests them to find and know more about the correlation between female and advertisement because they cannot be separated from the social life and modern industry.
3. For the company of the Lux and Giv the writer suggests to be more polite and do not present or use vulgar artist or models in the advertisements because most of Indonesian people are Muslims.
