This research discussed about The Illocutionary Act of Television Advertisements "Mobile Network Operator" (Pragmatic Analysis). This research aimed to find out the sentence type of utterances and to describe kind of direct and indirect illocutionary act which was performed in "mobile network operator" on television advertisement. The researcher focused on Searle's theory about Speech Act. Then, the data were analyzed using descriptive qualitative method where the data analyzed through Bogdan and Biklen in Emzir theory. The researcher used coding sheet as the instrument to find out more valid data. This research was conducted in order to give information to readers to understand deeply about any aspects of conversations. The findings showed that there were four advertisements that consisted in 48 utterances that found in the whole advertisements. The types of sentences were declarative sentence, imperative sentence, and interrogative sentence. The direct illocutions that mostly appear in this analysis were stating and asking. The others are informing, suggesting, answering, ordering, approving, complaining, offering, suggesting, commanding, explaining and committing. While the indirect illocutions that mostly appear were informing, complaining, and stating. The others are offering, convincing, answering, comparing, advising, requesting, opinion, thinking, threatening, surprising and hesitating.

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

This chapter consists of background, problem statement, objectives of the research, significances of the research, and scope of the research.

A. Background

According to Carey in Nur (2014: 13) Communication is as complex as culture and it can be described in many ways. The characteristic of communication is a tool to understand the person's words and actions. Communication is symbol process which evident is produced, maintained, repaired and transformed. Furthermore there are two kinds they are, verbal communication and nonverbal communication. Verbal communication is communications which use language as written and oral. Meanwhile, nonverbal communication uses gestures, facial expression, tone of voice, sign language, picture and so on, Navinger in Nur (2014: 16-67).

Pragmatics in linguistics today begins to get the attention of researchers and experts. This field tends to examine the function of speech or language function rather than form or structure. In other words more likely pragmatic rather than to the formalism to functionalism. Yule (1996:3) pragmatic is the study of speaker meaning and contextual meaning.

Advertisement is one of special form of communication to fill marketing function. Getting operates function of marketing, should be done in advertisement activity must be more than just provide information with consumer, be able to persuade consumer to behave like with office of strategy marketing to produce sale and profit, Advertising must be able direct consumer to use products which have arrangers by ministry of marketing, and eagerness buyer. Brevity, advertising must be influence election and decision of buyers (Jefkins, 1996: 15).

The researcher agrees with Jefkins opinion, he says that one of special form of communication to fill marketing function. As the special form of communication, most of advertisment is the kind of speech act persuasive with the goal to persuade costumers to buy one product. Advertiser often use strategy and comprehend in delivery. Language uses in advertising is suitable with advertiser requirement. Beside that the use types of sentence such us imperative, declarative, and introgative is one important thing to emphasize message so the costumers will be accept clearly. Advertisment can be delivered by some media, magazine, tabloid, radio, newspaper, banner, tv and so on. Television as the tools of communication has superiority in coupling picture, sound, and movement (Kotler, 1997:247). He adds that television always insert advertisment in each programs to show their product to media that has been up to standard. The researcher will choose advertisment object which to be analyzed in television from speech act aspect. The researcher will be focus on mobile network operator advertisement. There are many kinds of mobile network operator such us : Telkomsel, Indosat, Axis, 3, Smartfren, XL, and so on. Some of mobile network operator have been disappear in television but there are also still famous todays to show their excess.

Austin in Kreidler (1998: 181) states that speech act can distinguish three things, they are; locutionary act, illocutionary act, and perlocutionary act. The speech act can be found in the document, script of movie, journal, research document, advertisement, abstract, source, book, and magazine. One of them is advertisement which involves not only creating believable dialog, but also indicating the action and expressions of the advertiser. When the speaker performs the utterances, the speaker can realize in direct speech act and indirect speech act it the explicit and implicit meaning.

The researcher chooses this title because the researcher showed the meaning of the advertisement to viewer which is delivered by advertisers and mention about the type of sentence. Because in advertisement there are many utterances, so the most viewers do not understand what the advertiser means. The viewers only see the product either not observe the meaning of speech act which is delivered by advertiser. Therefore, the researcher is going to conduct the observation under the title “the illocutionary act on Television Advertisement of ‘Mobile Network Operator’ (Pragmatic Analysis).

B. Problem Statement

Based on the background above, the researcher formulated research questions as follow:

1. What are the sentence types of utterance performed by advertiser in “mobile network operator” on television advertisement?

2. What kinds of direct and indirect illocutionary act are performed in “mobile network operator” on television advertisement?

C. Objective of the research

Based on the statement of the problem, the researcher wants to get the targets as follow:

1. To find out the sentence type of utterances performed by advertiser in “mobile network operator” on television advertisement.
2. To describe direct and indirect illocutionary act are performed in “mobile network operator” on television advertisement.

D. Significances of Study

Practically, the researcher hopes that the readers especially the one who want to understand deeply about speech acts especially illocutionary acts, can analyze that are performed in the advertisement. Theoretically, the significance of this research is to give information to readers especially the students of Faculty of Adab and Humanities to understand deeply about any aspects of conversations.

E. Scope of Research

In relation that has been mentioned above, the researcher focused on illocutionary act which is appears within the “mobile network operator” advertisement. In this case, that is television advertisement especially Indonesian TV Channel. The researcher analyzed the type of sentence (declarative sentence, interrogative sentence and imperative sentence) and kinds of illocutionary act (direct and indirect illocutionary act). This research used Searle’s theory (2012) about speech act. Searle at all (2012: 8) says speech act is communication of human which performed with utterances of certain such as making statement, asking question, giving order, describing, explaining, apologizing, thinking, congratulating, and so on and involving the type of speech act, namely illocutionary act.

CHAPTER II

REVIEW OF RELATED LITERATURE

This chapter presents previous findings, and pertinent ideas.

A. Previous Findings

Rahman (2008), on his study under the title “Illocutionary Acts in the Movie ‘Monster in Law’”. The study applied discourse analysis by using quantitative and qualitative descriptive method. This research used John Austin theory. The aspect of this research is the types of sentence and the performative verbs in the illocutionary acts are performed in the movie in law. The objective of this research is finding out the performative verb of the illocutionary acts that consist of verdictive, exertive, commissive, behabitive and expositive and types of sentences that consist of declarative, interrogative, exclamatory, and imperative sentences in the movie Monster in Law. The result of this research shows that there are 1, 386 utterances. He found the four types of sentence such as declarative sentence, interrogative sentence, imperative sentence and exclamatory sentence and found performative verbs. Those are verdictives utterances, axertives utterance, commissive utterance, behabitives utterance and expositives utterance.

Afiah (2010), “Speech Act: The Expressions Use In Political Advertisement (Discourse Analysis)”. She analyzes the speech act: the expression which is used in political advertisement that use discourse analysis. She used descriptive method, and used John Searle theory. The aspect of this research is the kinds of the expressions and the types of illocutionary acts are used in the political advertisement. The object this research are to know the types of illocutionary act are used in the advertisement and to know the types of illocutionary act are used in the political advertisement. Having analyzed the data that has been identified, the writer found out that the act of illocution in political advertisement is ordering, suggesting, promising, convincing, persuading, informing, requesting, asserting.

The similarity of this research with the previous studies above is all the study analyzes about speech act, especially illocutionary act. Nevertheless, Rahman's study analysed about the illocutionary acts in movies that consist of the performative verbs in the illocutionary acts. Using mixed method and Austin's theory. Moreover, Afiah's study analysed speech acts of expression in political advertisement from the kinds of the expression (declarative, interrogative, and imperative). Using descriptive method and Searle's theory. Meanwhile, the researcher will analyse the types of sentence and kinds of illocutionary act on television "mobile network operator" advertisement, using descriptive qualitative method and Searle's theory.

B. Pertinent Ideas

In analyzing the data it needs theories. Therefore, in this chapter will be explained about the theories of this thesis.

1. Pragmatic

Pragmatics is the study of meaning in use. It focuses on how meaning is constructed and interpreted in a given context, and on how speakers often express something more different than, what they actually say.

Pragmatics in linguistics today begins to get the attention of researchers and experts. This field tends to examine the function of speech or language function rather than form or structure. In other words more likely pragmatic rather than to the formalism to functionalism. This is in accordance with pragmatic notion proposed by Levinson (1987:5 and 7), pragmatics is the study of the use of language or the study of language and functional perspective. That is, the study describes the structural aspects of language with reference to the effects and causes of non-linguistic.

Meanwhile, other linguists give definition about pragmatics some of them are Paltridge (2006:53) state that pragmatics is study of meaning in relation to the context in which a person is speaking or writing. This includes social, situation and textual context. Morris in Levinson (1983:1) who says pragmatics is the study of the relation of signs to interpreters. Yule (1996:3) pragmatic is the study of speaker meaning and contextual meaning. Another definition is delivered by Jenny Thomas (1995), pragmatics is the study of meaning in interaction” when the special emphasis on the interrelationship between the speaker, heaver, utterance and context. And the other linguist is Thomas Geoffrey Leech (1983), present pragmatics is the study of meaning in relation to speech situation.

Based on the definition above, it can concluded that pragmatics is the study of the relationship between language and context which form the basis for a record or report language understanding, in other words: the study of the language user’s ability to connect harmonize the sentences and proper contexts. So, that pragmatics is the study of language that focuses on the meaning and the context.

2. Communication

Effendy (2006: 5) says in a paradigmatic manner, communication is the process of delivered a message by one person to another to tell inform or change attitudes, opinions or behaviours, either verbally or mentally directly through the media.

Communication is the delivery of information, ideas, emotion, skill and so on through the use of symbols words, numbers, graphics and others (Fisher, 1990: 10). Meanwhile, Effendy (1984: 6) says communication is an event delivery human's idea.

From the definition above, the researcher conclude that communication is a process of delivering a message that can follows of information, ideas, emotions, skills and so on, through a symbol that can be cause effects in the form of behaviour which is done by certain media.

3. Types of sentence

In saying something we use different sentence types. One utterance might be performed by any kinds of sentence. According to Kreidler (1998: 176) mention three the form of sentence. They are declarative sentence, imperative sentence, and interrogative sentence.

a. Declarative Sentence

Declarative sentence is used when someone wants to say something completely or tries to deliver information to the people he wants to talk to. It is similar with the statement of Hatch (1992: 128) who says that “declarative is speech act that, when uttered brings out a new state of being”. The form of declarative sentence is mostly ended with full stop. For example, “Hana will pass the exam next month.” Here, the sentence is used to assert that Hana will be able to finish her text one month later.

b. Interrogative Sentence

The purpose of making an interrogative sentence is asking for something from the speaker to the hearer. It is same with the statement of Todd and Hancock (1986:252): “the word interrogative is applied to sentences which ask questions.”

c. Imperative Sentence

Imperative sentence this type of sentence is used to order people to do something or not to do something. The form is used commonly to show an expectation and it is used to give orders, Huddleston (1988: 3). The basic form of this type is that the sentence begins with verb, and typically ends with an exclamation mark, Todd and Hancock (1986: 246). For example, “protect our children and our future”. The type of sentence is imperative, in which the sentence begins with verb protect, even though it does not use an exclamation mode. The sentence is used to ask the hearer to protect people, children and protect their own future.

4. Speech Act

The development of speech act theory, credited to Austin (1962), and later Searle (1969), helps to identify and understand aspects of this problem. Austin’s (1962) book on communicative intent, How to Do Things with Words, attempts to distinguish among what a speaker says, what the speaker's means, and what the hearer thinks the speaker means.

According to Searle at all (2012: 8) says speech act is communication of human which performed with utterances of certain such as making statement, asking question, giving order, describing, explaining, apologizing, thinking, congratulating, and so on and mentions the types of speech act which is performed in a conversation, they are: locutionary act, illocutionary act, and perlocutionary act. The following are their explanations:

a. Locutionary Act

A locutionary act is an act of how a person produces the utterance or to produce a meaningful linguistics expression. When the speakers use his/her organ of speech to produce utterance, then, indirectly there is the locutionary act in his/her utterance. In the words, locutionary act is the act of the speaker in using his/her organ of speech to produce utterance. For example, "I promise to give you some money", the moment when the utterance is being said by the speaker by using the organ of speech is called locutionary act. A locutionary act is the act of saying something.

b. Illocutionary Act

The Illocutionary acts are an important thing to understanding speech acts. Illocutionary act is any speech act that amounts to stating, questioning, acknowledge, reporting, publishing, suggesting, thanking, pushing, promising and so on. It is the act performed in saying something, as contrasted with illocution act.

In every utterance, there must be a function in it. The function which is found in the utterance is called the illocutionary act. The following is the example:

“I promise to give you some money”

The utterance above is not only a statement but it also binds the speaker to what she/he has just said. This is because that utterance intention is the fact that the speaker will do something in future or we can say, the speaker promising something. Therefore, the illocutionary act of an utterance above is the act of promising.

Hurford and Heasley (1983: 244) say that illocutionary act carried out by speaker making an utterance is the act viewed in terms of the utterance significant within a conventional system of social introduction.

Based on explanation above, the researcher conclude that illocutionary act are intent of the utterance act, unit of meaning in communication and shows related to social introduction.

Searle in Rihardi (2005:26) categorize that there are five basic kinds of illocutionary act that one can perform in speaking, by means of the following five types of utterance:

Assertive: The point of purpose of this category is to state what the speaker believes to be the case or not or to deliver some fact to the hearer (paradigm cases: claiming, stating, a fact, complaining, swearing, concluding, comparing, hypothesizing, evaluating, opinion, reporting, and explaining.)

Directives: Which are attempts by the speaker to get the hearer to do something. The proposition content is the hearer does some future acts. (Paradigm cases: ordering, commanding, questioning, requesting, inviting, advising, suggesting, questioning.)

Commissives: The purpose of this act is to commit the speaker to some future course of action (paradigm cases: promising, vowing, committing, threatening, offering, guarantee, opposing, expecting, and refusing.)

Expressive: The point of this class is to express the psychological state which is specified in the sincerity condition. (Paradigm cases: thinking, apologizing, welcoming, congratulating)

Declarations: Which effect immediate changes in the institutional state of affairs and which tend to rely on elaborate extra-linguistic institutions (paradigm case: resigning, naming, appointing, legitimizing, stipulating, sentencing, excommunicating, declaring war, christening, firing from employment).

c. Perlocutionary Act

Perlocutionary act is the effect of the utterance which the speaker said to the hearer. For instance, I promise to give some money, the effect of the utterance that can be a happy one. This is a result of the fact that the hearer really needs some money. Yet, it can also give the opposite effect to the hearer. The hearer may feel angry because of that utterance. This is because the hearer is a very rich person who does not need any money from the speaker. The hearer will feel as if he is being mocked.

The same is true of the act cheering someone up this may well be accomplished through language, in which case it is a perlocutionary act but even than the act does not consist in saying certain things in a certain way, but in having a certain effect, which in principle could have been produced in some other way. Perlocutionary act brings about effects on the audience by means of uttering the sentence. Furthermore, perlocutionary act is an act performed by saying something (Leech (1983: 31)).

5. Direct and Indirect Illocution

Hurford and Heasley (1983:258) propose that one utterance may have several illocution at the same time. It is divided into two types of illocution. They are direct illocution and indirect illocution.

1. Direct illocution

The direct illocution of an utterance is the illocution most directly indicated by literal reading of the grammatical form and vocabulary of the sentence uttered. For example “can you pass the sugar” the direct illocution of the utterance is an enquiry about the hearer’s ability to pass the sugar. The indirect illocution is a request that the hearer pass the sugar. From this example we can state the following approximate rule about direct and indirect illocution. Where the direct illocution of an utterance is deliberately infelicitous, the indirect illocution is an act which the hearer’s attention is drawn by mentioning one of felicity conditions.

Hurford and Heasley (1987: 295) the direct illocution of an utterance is the illocution most directly indicated by a literal reading of the grammatical form and vocabulary of the sentence uttered.

2. Indirect Illocution

Different from the direct illocution, indirect can be defined as the “truly” meaning of the sentences and the utterances tend. It depends on the conditions or can be backgrounds, which are in the sentences or utterances. Hurford and Heasley (1987:259) it says that: “the indirect illocution of an utterance is any further illocution the utterance may have”.

Searle (1976) defines an indirect speech act as an act performed ‘by means of another’, and states that in indirect speech acts the speaker communicates more than is actually said. Thus, in indirect speech acts, there is connection between the literal meaning and the conversational meaning, or between the form and the conventional meaning are different. Whereas indirect speech are a normal occurrence in everyday language use. Searle is concerned with explaining how it is possible for the speaker to generate them and for the hearer to interpret them. He proposes that this can be accomplished because both the speaker and the hearer share the same linguistic and non-linguistic background information which allows them to create an implicature and make correct inferences, respectively.

Based on explanation above, the researcher can conclude that an utterance have more than one illocution. One of illocutionary act can be performed directly and indirectly.

6. Advertisements

Advertisement is something that we use to persuade people or society to consume any product. Isaacs (1998: 57), it is noted that an advertisement is any device or public announcement as a printed notice in a newspaper, a commercial film on television, a neon sign, etc, designed to attract public attention, bring in custom, etc.

Moreover, according to Douglas K. Stevenson (1996: 297) that advertisement is a payable tool that contains artistic words. Besides, Hayakawa (1978:237) notes that advertisement is the latest acceptable way to show a good literary form.

Furthermore, Goddard (1998: 7) state that advertisement is the non personal communication of information usually paid for and usually persuasive in nature about products, services or ideas by identified sponsors through the various media.

The other definition of advertisement can also be as a means to persuade people to do something. The advertisement is appropriate with the need of every company that published the advertisement (Spurgeon, 2008: 5).

It can be conclude that advertisement is a means to persuade people to buy some products or to do something that are launched by a company or an organization.

The kinds of advertisements are generally divided into two, which are standard advertisement and public service advertisement (Bittner, 1986:227). However, according to Bittner (1986:227), there are other kinds of advertisements which are social responsibility advertisement, counter advertisement, corrective advertisement, advocacy advertisement, and image advertisement.

CHAPTER III

RESEARCH METHOD

In this chapter, the researcher discuss the research design, source of data, instrument of the research, procedure of collecting data and technique of data analysis.

A. Research Method

This research used descriptive qualitative method. Bogdan and Biklen in Emzir (2014: 3) Descriptive qualitative method is a process of research that produces descriptive data in the form of words or images by analyzing data in the form of recording and transcripts. It aims to describe the meaning of the utterances in “mobile network operator” on television advertisement.

Those collected and take properly to build the foundation in answering the research question mentioned before.

C. Research Instrument

The instrument of this study used coding sheet. Transfer final concept and categories into a data table, note how the researcher listed the major categories, and then explained them after the table. This is a very effective way to organize results and discussion in a research paper. Here is an excellent comprehensive guide (think desk reference) to creating data displays for qualitative research (Aulls in Syarifuddin: 2017: 19).

D. Collecting Data Procedures

The procedure of collecting data in this research as follow:

- a. The researcher gets the advertisements show in the television on the YouTube because if the video on YouTube be clear more than if the researcher recorded from the television.
- b. The researcher used coding sheet to collect the data from the YouTube.
- c. The researcher transcribes the advertisement and then identifies the utterance of mobile network operator advertisement.
