CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

A. Background

Literature belongs to the realm of the imaginary, whatever it is said in a literary work can always be claimed to be experimental, hypothetical, cut off from referential or per-formative claims (Miller, 2002:5). On the other side, Damrosch (2003:5) states that literature is one of the great creative universal means of communicating the emotional, spiritual and intellectual concern of mankind.

Literature is all of the expression of feeling from authors which they want to tell to the reader, with using language and symbols as medium to express the idea or the feeling from the author and in that expression there is an artistic. Artistic in literary work is very important; because with graciously the author can make the work looks perfect and the reader will enjoy reading that literary work.

There are many kinds of literary work such as novel, poem, and short story. The novel is an extended prose narrative. Novels are fictional narratives representing a way of life or an experience. They range from slight recollections of a small part of life or an experience to the most complete and detailed accounts imaginable; and they vary from the lightest to the most serious experiences and events faced by man (Mackay, 2010:1)

In a novel there are many kind and aspects can be analyzed. One of them is imagery. Imagery is an author uses a word or phrase to impression the feeling or idea which related with the theme (Croft, 2001:55). The idea of imagery is a very simple one and, although it is used a good deal in poetic writing, it is of course found in other kinds of writing too. An image, quite simply, is words used in such a way as to create a picture in the mind of reader so that ideas, feelings, description and so on are conveyed more clearly or vividly. Image can work in several ways in the mind of reader. On a simply level as image can be used literally to describe something.

Imagery is a technique of writing which uses descriptive language to engage the reader's senses. A good imagery can employ words of color, light and texture to conjure a mental image within the reader. Besides that imagery in literature is a collection of techniques that appeal to the senses and bring a life like quality to characters or settings in a written work, aiding the reader's imagination.

In this thesis, the writer research about how is the use of imagery in Suzanne Collin's novel "Catching Fire". Imagery is the way in which the writer or author of a particular work conveys texture and vividness to the reader. The functions of imagery itself are to inducing a physical reaction in the reader. If the reader also has a past personal experience with the description, it may also recall the emotions associated with it. Effective descriptions establish an environment or circumstance, a setting or mood. Clever writers or those with exceptional skill in the technique can imbed depth and layers of additional meaning to a description that may even be beyond the awareness of a reader.

B. Problem Statement

Based on the background above, the writer formulates the research questions as follows:

1. What are the types of imagery used in Suzanne Collin's novel "Catching Fire"?
2. How is power of imagery in the Suzanne Collins's novel "Catching Fire"?

C. Objective of Research

The objective of research are followings:

1. To find out the 5types of imagery used in the Suzanne Collins's novel "Catching Fire."
2. To find out power of imagery in the Suzanne Collins's novel "Catching Fire."

D. Significance of Research

The purposes of this writing are to find out types of imagery and power of imagery in Suzanne Collin's novel "Catching Fire". This writing intends to give information about the power of imagery in literary work. This thesis would be good literature/ source for students or who are interested to write literary work in order to give the broader knowledge about using imagery their writing.

E. Scope of Research

In this research, the writer focuses on the types of imagery, they are visual imagery, olfactory imagery, auditory imagery, gustatory imagery, and kinesthetic imagery that includes in Suzanne Collins's novel "Catching Fire". Then the writer also focuses on finding out the power of imagery that includes in Suzanne Collins's novel "Catching Fire".

CHAPTER II

REVIEW OF RELATED LITERATURE

A. Previous Findings

The writer presented some previous findings, which related or relevant with this research, as follows:

Mariani(2010) in her thesis, “Imagery and Figure of Speech in Sylvia Plath’s Selected Poems”. She found that the figure of speech in the poems of Mirrors, Edge, and Metaphors. And also she found that author described her feeling and ideas in the poem into of animals, objects, and plants. She aimed to find the figure of speech in Sylvia Plath’s selected poems and find how the imagery in Sylvia Plath’s selected poems is by using Klarer’s theory.

Jessi(2009) in her journal, “The Power of Imagery in Beyonce's "If I Were a Boy”“. She found that Beyonce has essentially been imagining this role reversal the entire time. The person who truly doesn't "care how it hurts" to be taken advantage of IS the man, Beyonce is the one being "taken for granted," and Beyonce has effectively communicated her point: that just because you are a boy, does not mean you can't "listen to her" and "be a better man"; if you are a girl, you should stand up for yourself and not let modern society's views of your place in the world keep you in a relationship that makes you unhappy. She aimed to find powerful of imagery in Beyonce's "If I Were a Boy" "by using Boulding's theory.

Reuven (1998) in his journal, "A Cognitive Analysis of Religious Imagery in Poetry". He found that how figurative language turns religious ideas into verbal imitations of religious experience, in two stylistic modes: "Metaphysical" and "Mystic-Romantic". It also investigates the problem of fusing the Biblical conception of a personal Creator with the Neo-Platonic conception of creation as light emanation. Four English poets and two medieval poets, Hebrew and Armenian, are compared in their handling of light, fire and prison images in this cognitive mode and in the literary modes of allegory, symbol and archetypal patterns. He aimed to identify figurative language turns religious ideas into verbal imitations of religious experience, in two stylistic modes by using Russell's theory.

The similarity to this thesis with previous findings above is talking about imagery of the literary work such as poem and song. Mariani focused on how the imagery in Sylvia Plath's selected poems is, Jessi focused on the meaning of Beyonce's "If I Were a Boy" song and Reuven found the figurative language turns religious ideas into imitations of religious experience that include in the Dante's poetry "Light, Fire, and Prison."

In contrary in this research among the previous findings above, the writer focused on analyzing the types and power of imagery that include in the novel. In addition, this research also uses different data source from those previous findings above, this research will use novel. The writer analyzed the types of imagery in the Suzanne Collins's novel "Catching Fire".

B. Concept of Imagery

1. Definition

Imagery has many different meanings depending on the context in which it is used. In literature, it means the ability of a writer to paint a picture in the mind of the person reading their work. Symbols and words that evoke emotion are most used.

Brooks (1998) states that imagery most often refers to the visual aspects of a work of literature, but the term can be used to describe any sense perception that the author chooses to present to the reader. Anything that is seen, heard, touched, smelled, or tasted may be covered by this term. There are even cases in which a writer uses language appropriate to one sense to describe another. Imagery functions in a number of ways. One of its chief advantages is that it allows the reader to experience the work of literature more vividly. Imagery also can communicate mood and atmosphere more effectively than a direct statement from the author. In reading, it is important to be alert not only to isolate examples of imagery but also to pattern of imagery that develops in the course of a work. Imagery has always been an important ingredient of literature in general and poetry in particular. Because images can communicate meaning, it is often difficult to draw a clear distinction between image and symbol. And on the other side Sadoski and Paivio (2009:37) state that imagery as an essential element in literature and a major clue to symbolism, meaning, structure and effect.

Diyanni(2004:557) says that imagery is a concrete representation of a sense of impression, feeling, or idea. Imagery appeals to one or more of our senses. Imagery may be visual (something seen), aural (something heard), tactile (something felt), olfactory (something smelled), or gustatory (something tasted). The imagery cluster together to describe passing of time. When imagery form patterns of related details that convey an idea or feeling beyond what the imagery literally describe, we call them metaphorical or symbolic.

Imagery is writing that appeals to one or more of the five senses. Many writers use imagery to convey a picture without saying directly what the image is. This style of writing adds a unique mystery to the poem or story. Imagery is best used in nature, but it can also be used for describing inanimate objects. Many writers even use imagery to display something that cannot be seen, such as wind or heat. Good use of imagery is often written in a simple way that is much like the way a child would see things. Imagery can stimulate the imagination and create vivid pictures in the mind. Imagery can have a different effect on everybody. Imagery contains more than just a view of what a writer thinks. Imagery is a collage of senses that the writer imagines and feels. Imagery can best be described as 'witnessing an entire world made up of words (Little, 78: 2001).

Imagery differs from detail in the degree to which they appeal to the senses. Details are small parts of a passage; imagery is a longer passage itself. Imagery depends on diction and detail, that is, vivid diction and careful selection of detail imagery (a passage that is easy to picture, hear, smell, taste, and/or feel). Authors slow down and describe in detail when they want to emphasize something to the reader.

An image is an inner representation of author's experience or your fantasies a way author's mind codes, stores, and expresses information. Imagery is the currency of dreams and daydreams; memories and reminiscence; plans, projections, and possibilities. It is the language of the arts, the emotions, and most important, of the deeper self.

Imagery can mean something as simple as thinking of something and painting a picture in your mind. Experiences in this world by humans are done through one or more of our five senses of smell, touch, taste, hearing, and seeing. The expression of any of these sensory experiences through words is the practice of using imagery as a tool. The word itself implies that imagery is limited to the description of images in the mind's eye, it not anywhere near that restrictive. Imagery is used by the best writers and poets invoke as many of the five senses as possible in the mind of their readers

Based on the above explanation, the writer made conclusion. They are: imagery is the use of vivid description, usually rich in sensory words, to create; picture or image in the reader's mind. Imagery is usually evoking a more meaningful visual experience for the reader. Imagery is explaining or describes a situation, idea, action or object with the use of language that creates an image of said idea or action. And imagery make the literary work looks good and perfect; it will make the reader enjoy reading the literary work.

2. Types of Imagery

According to Diyanni (2004:559) imagery divided into 5 types and those are:

1. Visual: Visual imagery is as simple as it sounds: It describes something you can see. Visual imagery will describe a setting's colors, size, shape, physical features and anything else that you detect with eyes. Visual imagery creates the mental picture you see as you read a story.

Example: "The shadows crisscrossed the rug while my cat stretched languidly in one of the patches of sun."

From An example above allow us to see and imagine the patches of sun in a room, how the cat strched in the patches of sun. We can also see the shadows in that room. This represents a situation of a room. This is absolutly an example of visual imagery.

2. Olfactory: Olfactory imagery describes something you can smell. Writers can use lots of creative license with olfactory imagery by assigning smells to unusual things. For example, anyone can imagine the smell of chocolate chip cookies baking in the oven, but a writer can use olfactory imagery to describe the smell of a forest, a meadow or a summer night.

Example: "I was awakened by the strong smell of a freshly brewed coffee."

An example above represents the fresh smell of coffee. From that bold sentence above we can smell of the coffee, we also imagine how the smell of the coffee after the reader reads that word.

3. Gustatory: Gustatory imagery is something you can taste. Like olfactory imagery, gustatory imagery has endless possibilities for describing simple things in a creative way. Gustatory imagery can describe anything from the taste of a slice of pizza to the taste in your mouth before you have to make a big speech.

Example: "Forgive me they were delicious so sweet and so cold."

In this particular excerpt, we can see how individual images provide us with that snapshot –delicious so sweet and so cold. It's example of visual gustatory. After read that the bold sentence, the reader imagine about how the taste of delicious, sweet, and so cold.

4. Auditory: Auditory imagery, also known as aural imagery, describes something you can hear. It can be used on a large scale, such as describing the sounds of an earthquake, or it can be more subtle, such as the sound of footsteps on a wooden floor.

Example: “The voice of the last cricket.”

The bold sentence represents to us auditory imagery, it can be seen in the bold sentence which known as something we can hear. When we read “last cricket” the reader imagine how tha the voice of that cricket.

5. Kinesthetic: Kinesthetic imagery appeals to our sense of touch. It describes parts of the story you can feel on your skin. Good tactile imagery should make you feel something as though it were really there.

- Example: “A cold wind on your face.”

If we look at the bold sentence, it can be said that it is kinesthetic imagery because it described something we can feel with our skin. The reader imagine that when a cold wind on their face. That’s why the writer categorized as kinesthetic imagery.

3. Effects of Imagery

Imagery is what we visualize in our mind. The images we think of while we read. Imagery hugely effects the reader, we imagine imagery is what we. Imagery hugely effects the reader, we imagine the setting, the characters, situation, and good imagery can affect not only the images we see emotions we feel. If something described with a lot of colors, or gray, or black, or white. The feeleng we got and what we associated with those colors effects how we interpret the story and the characters.

Imagery refers to the “pictures” which we perceive with our mind’s eyes, ears, nose, tongue, skin, and through which we experience “duplicate word” created by poetic language. Imagery evokes the meaning and truth of human experiences not in abstract terms, as in philosophy, but in more perceptible and tangible forms. This is a device by which the poet makes his meaning strong, clear and sure.

According to Abriza (2001), imagery that we can experience while reading, either spontaneously or induced by instruction is now known to have powerpul effects in memory and appreciation tor text. Imagery allows the author to show us and keeps him from simply telling us. Imagism refers to the idea that an image, presented on its own, in a poem, has the power to unite the author and the reader/listener in the exact impulse or experience that led the author to write the story. Power of imagery itself give an extraordinary effects to the reader. Strong imagery can be seen from how many times emerge from the text. Imagery is important in a literary work because it is language that allows us to be transported to place, time, and experience, which if the image is effective, allows us to understand the emotion being conveyed in the story.

C. Synopsis of the Novel

Catching Fire is the second installment of The Hunger Games trilogy, published dated 1 September 2009 in the United States. The Hunger Games trilogy, the story continues as Katniss Everdeen, with friends of the district, Peeta Mellark, managed to fool the Capitol and win The Hunger Games. Catching Fire Katniss tells of life after he became a winner and feel the luxury provided by the Capitol to her and Peeta. But Katniss and Peeta do not feel happy, but regret and feel guilty for causing the other participants did not survive. It increases the feeling of regret when Victory Tour held around the District, where Katniss and Peeta have to deal with the families of participants who did not survive in the Arena and delivered an apology to the people of the district who have lost a member of his district.

Capitol previously angered by the treatment of Katniss and Peeta in the Games who deceive them, so it is getting hot. They consider Katniss and Peeta have started the uprising. Then in the next year, held a Capitol Quarter Quell (The Hunger Games celebration to 75) and in contrast to previous years, Capitol decided to take participants from the Winner of The Hunger Games is still alive. Katniss and Peeta, who face the trauma of post unfinished games, are required to participate in the celebration and back to the Arena to fight to the death against Hunger Games winner in previous years (Collin, 2009)

D. Author's Biography

Collins was born on August 10, 1962 in Hartford, Connecticut. She is the daughter of a U.S. Air Force officer who served in the Vietnam War. After meeting children's author James Proimos while working on the Kids' WB show Generation O!, Collins was inspired to write children's books herself. Her inspiration for Greg or the Over lander, the first book of The New York Times best selling series The Under land Chronicles, came from Alice in Wonderland, when she was thinking about how one was more likely to fall down a manhole than a rabbit hole, and would find something other than a tea party. Between 2003 and 2007 she wrote the five books of the Under and Chronicles: Greg or the Over lender, Greg or and the Prophecy of Bane, Greg or and the Curse of the Warm bloods, Greg or and the Marks of Secret, and Greg or and the Code of Claw. During that time, Collins also wrote a rhyming picture book, When Charlie Mc Button Lost Power (2005), illustrated by Mike Lester (Ferber, 2009).

CHAPTER III

RESEARCH OF METHODOLOGY

A. Research Method

In this research, the writer uses qualitative descriptive method. Qualitative descriptive method involves reading, understanding and giving meaning in interpreting the data and also qualitative descriptive method intends to describe everything related to the topic of the research. This method is used to describe the power of imagery in the novel “Catching Fire” by Suzanne Collins.

B. Data Source

Data source of this research is all chapters of the novel “Catching Fire” by Suzanne Collins. There are twenty seven chapters and 391 pages in her novel. In this research, the writer takes some chapters to be corpus to analyze.

From all of the chapters in this novel, the writer chooses ten chapters, from chapter 1 till chapter 10 which relevant with this analysis.

C. Instrument of Research

In collecting data, the writer uses note taking as the instrument of the research. Ray (2005: 13) defines note taking is a method in assembling data required by using note cards to write down the data findings from source of data. In order to find the data easily, on the note cards are also completed by number and page where the data found. It is used to find the data from Suzanne Collins's novel "Catching Fire."

D. Procedure of Data Collecting

In collecting data, the writer followed the procedures as follows:

1. The writer reads Suzanne Collin's Novel "Catching Fire".
2. The writer takes note cards; they are blue for visual imagery, green for olfactory imagery, black for gustatory imagery, pink for auditory imagery, and white for kinesthetic imagery.
3. The writer identifies the 5types of imagery and the power of imagery Suzanne Collin's Novel "Catching Fire".
4. Then the writer writesdown the data which express 5 types of imagery, in Suzanne Collin's Novel "Catching Fire".
5. After all data have been written down on the note cards, the writer arranges the note cards based on colours of the card.

E. Technique of Data Analysis

The data in this research was analyzed based on the theory of Diyannito analyze the types of imagery; they are visual imagery, olfactory imagery, gustatory imagery, auditory imagery, and kinesthetic imagery and theory of Abriza to analyze the power of imagery in Suzanne Collins's novel "Catching Fire."

CHAPTER IV

FINDINGS AND DISCUSSIONS

This chapter consists of findings and discussions that show the result of the research. The writer would like to show what have been found from Suzanne Collins's novel "Catching Fire".

A. Findings

In this research, the writer presents the findings based on 5 types of imagery and power of imagery in Suzanne Collins's novel "Catching Fire". Through data analysis, it was found that there are five types of imagery. All types of imagery proposed by Diyanni (2004: 557) were found in the novel, they are identifying items about visual imagery, gustatory imagery, kinesthetic imagery, auditory imagery, and olfactory imagery.

To understand the data collection, the writer presented table with explanation as follows:

1. Types of imagery:
  - a. Visual Imagery
  - b. Olfactory Imagery
  - c. Gustatory Imagery
  - d. Auditory Imagery
  - e. Kinesthetic Imagery

Then the source (novel) of the data was explained with C is chapter, P is page, and D is data.
