Title : Phenomenon of Language Choice in Sebatik (Malaysia-Indonesia Border)
Supervisor I : Hj. Nuri Emmiyati
Supervisor II : Sardian Maharani Asnur

This research aimed to describe the Phenomenon of Language Choice in Sebatik in the education domain. This research focused on Fishman's theory in Holmes about Sociological Perspective about domain language. The data were analyzed using descriptive qualitative method. The researcher used interview guide and observation sheet as the instrument to get the valid data. The findings of this research showed that Education domain indicated the situation of language choice in language use occurred the bilingual, multilingual, and monolingual, as personally, diglossia, and code switching and code mixing. Based on the findings the researcher concluded that Sebatik society in the education domain constituted as multilingual society and diglossia. In addition, the use of language that occurred in education domain of Sebatik were code mixing and code switching. It showed that there was the language choice. The implication of this thesis was to tell the society that the language choice occurred among them and mostly used Bahasa, Malay, and they sometimes used their vernacular language among them.

Keywords: Language Choice, Bahasa, Malay, Vernacular Language, Sociolinguistics

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

This chapter consists of background, the problem statement, the objective of the research, the scope of the research, the significance of the research.

A. Background

Social interaction in multilingual society, demand the speakers to choose the exact language for any occasion. Language choice is not randomly but considers some factors. David (2006) argued that language choice is triggered by factors such as social status, gender, educational attainment, ethnicity, age, occupation, rural and urban origin, speakers, topic, place, media, and formality of the situation. Speakers choose an appropriate register, genre, style, medium, or tone of voice in relation to the interlocutor (who), topic (what), context (where), and medium (how) in every conversation.

In terms of variety of language, all kinds and varieties of language that exist in the entire world are part of His power. Therefore, truly noble people who up hold the majesty of the verses of Allah SWT. In Al-Qur'an Karim Surah Ar-Rum verse 22, Allah SWT says:

وَمِنْ آيَاتِهِ خَلْقَ السَّمَوَاتِ وَالْأَرْضِ وَأَخْتِلَافَ أَلْسِنَتِكُمْ
وَالْوَلْوَكُمْ إِنَّ فِي ذَلِكَ لَآيَاتٍ لِّلْعَالَمِينَ

Translation:

“And among His Signs is the creation of the heavens and the earth, and the variations in your languages and your colors: verily in that are Signs for those who know”.

Based on Tafseer of Jalalain, this verse showed something very powerful that has many implications for the human living in a diverse society or wherever we are in the world. God says of those signs, “is the differences of your tongue”. The difference of languages, the diversity on the Earth is actually a sign of Allah SWT. It is a proof and miracle of God. People who speak a language different than yours are not to be made fun of, they are supposed to be respected. What is coming out of their mouth is actually something tied directly to revelation. Therefore, it might think somebody who is speaking Bahasa, Malay, or their vernacular language. As a matter of fact, all of it should be respected because it is from the verse of Allah SWT.

Due to this verse mentioned “the variation in your language”, the language we used in daily conversation is remarkably varied. In term of language choice, in doing conversation the speaker need to choose which variety or code will be used. Generally, it was related to what Holmes revealed in her book;

Holmes (2013:1) said that sociolinguists study the relationship between language and society. They are interested in different social context, and they are concerned with identifying the social function of language and the way it is used to convey social meaning. Examining the way people use language in different social contexts provides a wealth of information about the language works, as well as about the social relationships in a community, and the people convey and construct aspects of their social identity through their language.

In term of language choice in multilingual communities, Holmes (2013: 19-25) stated that there are some factors which are relevant to why peoples need to use certain variety or code in doing interaction. They are factors affecting language choice, other social factors affecting code choice, and choosing variety or code. In doing an interaction the speaker needs to know the situation, with who they talk to, topic, and the goal of the interaction.

In term of sociolinguistic and the sociology of language, some investigators had found the distinction between sociolinguistic (micro-sociolinguistic) and the sociology of language (macro-sociolinguistic). Wardhaugh (2006:13) defined sociolinguistic as a concern with investigating the relationship between language and society with the goal being a better understanding of the structure of language and how languages function in communication; the sociology of language is a concern in how social structure can be better understood through the study of language. In addition, Hudson (1996:4) had described the difference as follow: sociolinguistic the study of language in relation to society; whereas the sociology of language is the study of society in relation to language. Which means, in sociolinguistic we study language and society in order to find out as much as we can about what kind of thing language is, and in the sociology of language we reverse the direction of our interest. It is related to what Coulmas (1997:2) said that micro-sociolinguistic investigates how social structure influences the way people talk and how language varieties and patterns of use correlate with social attributes; macro-sociolinguistic studies what societies do with their language, that is, attitude and attachments that account for the functional distribution speech form in society, language shift, maintenance, and replacement, the delimitation and interaction of speech communities.

Generally, sociolinguistic investigated multilingual communities. In fact, the phenomenon of language choice also related to in it, because in determined which language varieties or code are used, there must be the others languages will be used. In sociolinguistic perspective, Rokhman (2009:3) stated that phenomenon of language choice is a social fact and consider it as a code, socio-cultural behavior, and pragmatic. And so, in sociolinguistic perspective language choice is a communication discourse and at the same time shows the socio-cultural identity of the speakers.

In sociolinguistic perspective, the phenomenon of language choice is the one of an interesting thing to research. We can see two, three, and so on varieties of languages could be used in a communication. As an example: Malay and Bahasa easily to communicate because those languages have some similarities. Fasold (1984: 180) (in Rokhman2009:2) said that sociolinguistic could become one of study program because there is the choice of language use.

He gives illustration with a societal multilingual term which refers to the fact that showed there are many languages in society. He gives an illustration with societal multilingualism term that refers to the fact with the presence of many languages. There will be no chapter about diglossia when there are no high and low varieties. When we analyze each of chapter in Fasold's (1984) work, it will be clear that each of study in his work concern about the possibility of choosing that could make in society about the use of language variety. In addition, he adds that even the statistic will not be required in the sociolinguistic study when there is no variety in language use and the choice between that varieties.

Rahardi (2006: 78) said that Language in certain society and culture always been used appropriately with the situation, condition, and our requirement. The purpose of language that will be used also could be seen as one of the determining factors of a variety of language. Such as Indonesian in our daily activity, the variety of that language use always fulfilled with the varieties of language. If the condition demands us in relax situation, so just use the relax variety of language.

Nowadays, most of the societies in some regions have the knowledge of the varieties of language and using more variety of languages. For example in Sebatik Island especially in Aji Kuning, most of the inhabitant use Malay in their business deals. It cannot devoid that they are using their vernacular language in doing interaction with the other. It depends on with who they talk to. They always do the language choice in their daily life even in their family, school, or in doing business.

In this research, the writer focused at SMP Negeri 1 Sebatik Tengah. Most of the students, in their daily conversation mostly used Malay with their friend. It cannot avoid that their language has been influenced by their parent who still working in Malaysia. And some of their parents are the inhabitant of Aji Kuning who has been doing some business at Malaysia until it could give the influence to their language. It cannot avoid their teacher's language is not influence by Malay or even by their vernacular language. Furthermore, most of their teachers are also from Aji Kuning.

Therefore the writer had been doing a pra-observation in his hometown, at Sebatik (Malaysia-Indonesia Border). Generally, the society used at least five languages; Buginese, Dayaknese, Javanese, Malay, Bahasa, as their colloquial language. That is why the writer interest in doing further observation about it. Some of them still maintain their vernacular language in daily communication with their family, use the comfortable one with their friend or in their daily communication depend on the situation and with who they talk to.

In this research, the writer had choose three languages as the object research, which are Bahasa, Malay, and the vernacular language (the local dialect from each subject). Bahasa as the formal language which is used in a formal situation, but sometimes it uses with adding some local dialect or Malay, depends on with who they talk to. Malay, in a certain place there, the society uses it as their daily communication. The vernacular language is always used in their own community.

B. Research Question

It deals with above explanations that language choice is one of the interesting things to research in nowadays. Most of the phenomenon of language choice could be founded in our society. Moreover, the writer formulated the research questions to give more specific views about language of choice as follow; How is the language choice of Sebatik society in education domain?

C. Object of The Research

In relation to the problem of the study that the objectives of the research is; it was generally to described the phenomenon of language choice in Sebatik in education domain.

D. Scope of The Research

The study of the phenomenon of language choice is related to sociological, psychological and anthropological approach, Fishman (1964 in Rokhman 2009:5). In sociological perspective, it is related to domain analysis. In psychological perspective, it is related to individual perspectives, such as individual motivation. In anthropological perspective, it is related to the human behavior to explore the value of culture.

Holmes (2013:19-26) explained that domain of language use involves typical interactions between typical participants in typical settings about a typical topic. The domain is a socio-cultural construct abstracted from the topic of communication, in accord with the constitution, of the society and the area of activity of speech community in such a way that individual behavior and social pattern can be distinguished from each other and yet related to each other. Examples of these domains are family, friendship, religion, education, and employment. This term popularized by Fishman (1964).

In addition, Fishman (1972) reveals that the factors which influence the concept of the domain are topic, role location, and locale. The topic can be a regular of language use in multilingual settings. For example, someone changes his/her language to the interlocutor's language when discussing a certain topic. Role relation means that languages you are using are determined by the interlocutor you speak with. For example, father talks to mother, child speaks to mother, and mother speaks to child. Locale means that the place where the conversation takes place influence the language you are using.

By doing this research, the writer had choose two approaches; the sociological approach and the psychological approach. For the domain of language in this research, the writer focused on education domain.

E. Significance of The Research

By doing this research, it was expected to be relevant and useful theoretically and practically. Theoretically, this study supposed to be a previous finding for the next researchers who want to conduct the same field about language choice. This research expected to be one of information sources about language choice. Furthermore, the finding useful for language planners in order to improve their knowledge about language choice.

Practically, this research focused on Sebatik Island society which is directly connected to Sebatik's culture and more variety of the language. It is also expected to be useful for the students who have interested in learning more and more variety of language.

CHAPTER II

REVIEW OF RELATED LITERATURE

In this chapter, the writer presented the previous finding about the phenomenon of language choice; the pertinent ideas include the definition language choice and type of language choice. The writer also explained about the object of research.

A. Previous Finding

In this part, the writer presented some previous findings which had been done by some researchers as follow:

Domanig (2010), in his dissertation titled Language Choice in Interracial Marriages: The Case of Filipino and Malaysian Couple. The objective of his research was to examined the language choice in interracial couple's communication. More specifically, this research examined the language choice, accommodation strategies, and code switching pattern in verbal communication of Filipino-Malaysian couples in the home domain. Furthermore, this study explored the occurrence of language choice in relation to ethnicity, first language, and gender. The data were collected using the qualitative approach by interviewing and recording the conversation of Filipino-Malaysian couples. To support the qualitative approach, the quantitative based on the questionnaire result were also used. It revealed that Filipino-Malaysian couples prefer English as their medium of communication at home with some switching to Malay, Chinese, and Filipino languages. The couple preference of English was generally although none of them consider English as their first language. Their mother tongue becomes the secondary preference which is evident in the use of code switching. His findings further revealed that the couple language is influenced by ethnicity, first language, and gender.

Valentino (2013) in his article titled Joshua Fishman's Domain of Language Use in Relation to Multicultural Life in English Language Education Study Program Sanata Dharma University. The objective of his article was to prove Joshua Fishman's theory of domain of language use in relation to multicultural life in the English Language Education Study Program of Sanata Dharma University as well as to find the possible factors which influence language use in every domain of language use they applied daily. In his article proved that Joshua Fishman's theory of domain of language use in the relation to multicultural life was applied. And also showed that the variety of language use depended on local language, cultures, and speech community and influenced the choice of words when the discourse contain formality and politeness.

Rokhman (2009), in his article titled Fenomena Pemilihan Bahasa dalam Masyarakat Multilingual: Paradigma Sociolinguistik. The objective of his article was to describe the phenomenon of language choice in multilingual communities based on sociolinguistic paradigm. The social interaction in multilingual communities, with some varieties of language sues the speakers to choose the exact language or varieties of language which suitable with the communication situation. This language choice is not random accept considering some factors. In his article revealed that language choice in sociolinguistic paradigm not only connected with linguistic problem, but also with the social problem, culture, psychology, and situation. In Indonesian language context, with some varieties of language which used in social interaction, a deep research of this phenomenon is really important to do.

Concerning about the similarity of those previous findings above, the writer also focused on analyzing the language choice. Moreover, the first previous finding had the different object; the second and the third previous finding used the similarity theories with the researcher.

B. PERTINENT IDEAS

1. Language Choice in Multilingual Communities

In multilingual communities there are some varieties language were used for some purpose. It cannot avoid that the speaker should choose which variety would be used and in some situation they switched it or even mixed it. In daily conversation, speakers could not avoid making choices, for things can always be formulated differently (Coulmas, 2005:7). In addition R. Mesthrie et al (2004:146) stated that language choice refers to a term used extensively in multilingual studies, be it as speakers selection between languages, or language varieties in particular context, or domain of use.

In term to choose which language will be used and be motivated by certain factors, Meyerhoff (2006:102) stated that choosing among languages can be invested with the same kind of social and affective meaning as choosing style in one language. Languages can be invested with the additional interactional meaning means the process of drawing up official policies of language planning and language in education can be charged one. Decision made about the official use and recognition of languages can have powerful impact on long-term strength of language.

Wardhaugh (2006:88), it is possible to refer to a language or variety of a language as a code. The term is useful because it is neutral. Dialect, language, style, standard language, pidgin, and creole are such terms that inclined to arouse emotion. Code, taken from information theory, can be used to refer to any kind of system that two or more people employ for communication; it can actually be used for a system used by a single person, as when someone think about a private code to protect certain secrets. In addition he asserted that, in general, when you open your mouth, you must choose a particular language, dialect, style, or variety- that is, a particular code.

Within each code there will also possibility of choices not all of which will have the same import because some will be more significant and will be more marked than others. The various choices will have different social meanings.

Language choice can be examined from different perspectives: sociological, socio-psychological, and anthropological. These approaches focused on different issues and their methods of investigation, such as investigating language choice from a sociological perspective describes the language behavior of a group of people in relation to different kinds of changes in sociocultural processes. Sociologists had mainly focused on domains of language behavior; it is often using quantitative research methods such as surveys. Social psychologists are interested in studying individuals' psychological processes and motivations of language behavior in connection with structures within society. In this type of study, quantitative methods such as surveys and samples are usually used to explain why bilinguals choose between their languages in different domains. They also relied on qualitative methods of investigation.

Fasold (1984: 187) defined anthropologist which refers to the individual's language behavior in regard to the social structure. They study the values that groups of people associate with their language and culture, and how these values influence their behavior. Individuals' choices between different languages may indicate a change in cultural values, and anthropologists try to understand the processes of change in these values. They usually use qualitative methods such as participant observation. It is emphasized in the literature that domains, within which the first or second language is used, play a very important role in language maintenance and shift. The language domain should be considered an abstraction of an interactional situation in which a cluster of sociocultural, sociolinguistic, and linguistic factors is at work.

Fishman (1972:449) states that a domain to be sociocultural construct abstracted from topics of communication, which has relationships between communicators, and locales of communication, in accord with the institutions of a society and the environment of activity of a speech community, in such a way that individual behavior and social patterns can be distinguished from each other and yet related to each other. He also adds an examples of domains mentioned in the literature are the family, the playground and the street, the school, the church, work, literature, the courts, and other administrative institutions. The correct definition and designation of domains requires a deep understanding of the sociocultural dynamics, norms, and values of a particular society at a particular time in its history. This is because the domains of language behavior may vary from context to context in terms of both number and level. Weinreich (1953: 107) maintains that it is possible to survey the process of language shift by mapping and outlining those domains in which both languages function. This is referred to as domain analysis of the language use. If the majority language is gradually taking over the functions of the minority language in those specific areas where the L1 was once used, the process of language shift may have started.

a. Factors Affecting Language Choice

Tripp (1968: 197) presents four major domain factors which cause changes in verbal behavior: setting, participant, topic, and functions of the interaction.

Tripp (1968: 197) adds that each of these factors may account for choosing one language instead of the other, but it is usually a combination of several factors that leads to a choice between languages. There is a dynamic and complex interaction between the domain factors, which makes studying the extent of their influence on language choice difficult. In the following, each factor is briefly discussed.

1) Setting

This expression should be taken as designating a cluster of factors perceived by interacting speakers. It may be connected to locale (time, place) and situation. Ervin-Tripp (1968: 197) states, setting may be culturally constrained, which determines the appropriate respondents, situation, functions, topics, style, and mode of interaction (formal/informal).

2) Participant

Individual characteristics such as their role relationship, age, sex, language proficiency, socioeconomic background, ethnic background, language history with the interlocutor, power relation, education, religion, extent of intimacy with the interlocutor, group membership, language preference and language attitudes highly affect their choice of language.

3) Topic

Another language choice factor is topic. It may be the case that certain topics of conversation are better dealt with in one language than in others in particular situations. Individuals who usually speak in one language may switch to another when discussing a particular topic. This switch maybe caused by the speaker's limited competence in the subject matter and lack of specialized terms needed for a satisfying discussion. It may also be conditioned by the language, it lacks the exact terms required for an adequate discussion on the topic.

4) Functions of the interaction

Another determinant of language choice is the function of interaction. Scholars have tried to develop models of language choice which illustrate interaction functions. Some of these models, such as decision trees and flow charts, cannot precisely and accurately reflect changes of an individual's language choice over a period of time. This is because patterns of language choice are considered to be static by these models, such as the language choice patterns of the first generation usually differ from those of the second, just as women differ from men in choosing between their languages.

b. Other social factors affecting code choice

- 1) The social distance dimension. How well do they know each other, what is the social distance between the participants? are they strangers, friends, brother? For example that illustrate before in Kalala's case, would use a different code to each.
- 2) The status relationship between people may be relevant in the selecting the appropriate code. A high-status official will be addressed in standard in many contexts. Social role may also be important and is often a factor contributing to status difference between people. The same person may be spoken to in a different code depending on whether they are acting as a teacher, as parent, or as customer in the market-place.
- 3) The setting and the dimension of formality may also important in selecting an appropriate code or variety. The variety used for a formal radio lecture differs from that used for the adverts.
- 4) The function or the goal of the interaction. What is the language being used for? Is the speaker asking a favor or giving order to someone?

c. Choosing Variety or Code

Holmes (2013:19-26) believes that in choosing variety or code there are two factors:

- 1) What is your linguistic repertoire

Example:

Kalala is 16 years old. He lives in Bukavu, an African city in the east of the Democratic Republic of the Congo-Zaire with a population of about 240,000. It is a multicultural, multilingual city with more people coming and going for work and business reasons than people who live there permanently. Over 40 groups speaking different languages can be found in the city. Kalala, like many of his friends, is unemployed. He spends his days roaming the streets, stopping off periodically at regular meeting places in the market-place, in the park, or at a friend's place. During a normal day he uses at least three different varieties or codes, and sometimes more.

Kalala speak an informal style of Shi, his tribal language at home with his family and with the formal Shi used for weddings and funeral. He uses informal Shi in the market when he meets with vendors from his own ethnic group. He uses the lingua franca of the area, Swahili, when he communicates with people from a different tribal group. He learned standard (Zairean) Swahili at school, but the local market-place has a little different variety, it is called Kingwana. He uses Kingwana to younger children and adults he meets in the street.

Standard Swahili is one of the national language, used in Bukavu for most officials transactions, even the fact that French is the official language of Democratic Republic of the Congo-Zaire. Kalala uses standard Swahili with official in government offices when he has to fill in form or pay a bill. He uses another variety or code called Indoubil, which is used among the young people in Bukavu and used like in-group slang between young people in monolingual communities.

So, Kalala's linguistic repertoire include three varieties of Swahili (standard Zairean, local Swahili or Kingwana, and Indoubil) and two varieties of his tribal language, Shi (a formal and a informal or casual type). The factors that lead Kalala to use one code rather than another are the kinds of social factors, characteristic of the users or participant.

2) Domain of Language Use

Fishman (1997:44) states the domains as "all of the interactions that are rather unambiguously related (topically and situationally) to another of the major institutions of society, such as: the family, education, religion, and mass media". He also adds the domains where language is used are multiple; the choice of language use in the different domains can be indicative of the state of the language as well as predictive of future state of the language among the individuals in the community.

Example:

Anahina is a bilingual Tongan New Zealander living in Auckland. At home with her family she uses Tongan almost exclusively for a wide range of topics. She often talks to her grandmother about Tongan customs, for instance. With her mother she exchanges gossip about Tongan friends and relatives. Tongan is the language the family uses at meal-times. They discuss what they have been doing; plan family outings and share information about Tongan social events. It is only with her older sisters that she uses some English words when they are talking about school or doing their homework.

Certain social factors: who you are talking to, the social context of the talk, the function, and the topic of the discussion; turn out to be important in accounting for language choice in many different kind of speech community. It has proved very useful, particularly when describing code choice in large speech communities, to look at typical interactions which involved these factors. The setting is at home; the participants are family members, and the topic is family activity. Holmes (2013:22) reveals that number of such typical interactions have been identified as relevant in describing patterns of code choice in many speech communities; it is known as domain of language use, a term popularized by J. Fishman. A domain involves typical interactions between typical participants in typical setting.

2. Diglossia

Meyernoff (2006:113) stated that in some multilingual communities, the different measure that determine the vitality of language varieties are more rigidly demarcated than in others. Charles Fergusson noted this when he writing about the relationship between Classic Arabic and the vernacular spoken varieties of Arabic used in the Middle East and the vernacular spoken French and Haitian Creole in Haiti. He thought that there was some differentiation of the domain and functions for which the different language were used in both the Middle East and Haiti although the languages in each locale were more or less historically related.

In her book (2006:114) Ferguson called the language with higher prestige, and which is used in more formal contexts and for writing, the High variety (H), and the vernacular variety the Low variety (L). In his original case studies of diglossia, the two varieties in use in the community had some historical link to each other, and one could be argued to have its roots in the other.

It is related to what Wardhaugh (2006:89) said in his book. He stated that a diglossic situation exist in a society when it has two distinct codes which show clear functional separation; the first code is employed in one set of circumstance and the second is in an entirely different set. Fergusson (1959:336) has defined diglossia as follows:

“diglossia is a relatively stable language situation in which, in addition to the primary dialects of the language (which may include a standard or regional standards), there is a very divergent, highly codified (often grammatically more complex) superposed variety, the vehicle of a large and respected body of written literature, either of an earlier period or in another speech community, which is learned largely by formal education and is used for most written and formal spoken purposes but is not used by any sector of the community for ordinary conversation.”

In the same article he identified four language situation which show the major characteristics of the diglossic phenomenon: Arabic, Swiss German, Haitian (French and Creole), and Greek. In the Arabic situation the two varieties are Classical Arabic (H) and the various regional colloquial varieties (L). In Switzerland they are Standard German(H) and Swiss German (L). In Haiti the varieties are Standard French (H) andHaitian Creole (L). In Greece they are the Katharévousa (H) and Dhimotiki, or Demotic (L), varieties of Greek.

A key defining characteristic of diglossia is that the two varieties are kept quite apart in their function. For example, the H varieties may be used for delivering sermon and formal situation especially in parliament, giving political speech, delivering news on television. And for the L varieties may be used in conversation with family, giving instructions to household servant, in “folk literature”. In some situations such as in the class discussion, a teacher may lecture in an H varieties but answer the question about its contents in an L varieties so as to ensure understanding.

According to Sebba (2014:450) that the characters of High and Low varieties do not pose a problem, it is enough to say that “High and Low have disjointed function: where High is appropriate, L is inappropriate and vice versa”. Thus, the difference concerns the codes themselves, for example, their syntax, phonology, lexicon, which are merely a reflection of the social characteristics, such as their function, status, acquisition, the degree of standardization. L is typically used in familiar interaction, whereas High is acquired later at school. It should be stressed that people who live in a diglossic community do not usually consider their lives to be as complicated by diglossia as those living outside such a community. The problem may be revealed by the desire to decrease regional barriers, or when the question on unifying national language is raised.

In the term of diglossia, Holmes (2013:27) believes that diglossia has three crucial features:

- a. Two distinct varieties of the same language are used in the community, with one regarded as a high (H) variety and low (L) variety. The two varieties are linguistically related, the relationship is closer in some cases than others. For example, the differences in the pronunciation of H and L varieties from place to place.

- b. Each variety is used for quite distinct function; H and L complement each other. Most of the vocabulary of H and L is the same. For example; perused and read, affluent and rich.
- c. No one use the H variety in daily conversation. For example in school, it is taught and for very formal interaction and in writing.

3. Code Switching and Code Mixing

Wardhaugh (2006:101), the particular dialect or language that a person chooses on any occasion is a code, a system used for a communication between two or more participants. It is unusual for a speaker to have command or use only one such code or system. Most speakers need several varieties of any language they speak. It could be a rarely phenomenon if they only need a single variety of language. People are usually required to select a particular code whenever they choose to speak, and they also decide to switch from one code to another or to mix codes even sometime very short sentences. In addition he called this process as code-switching. Code-switching (also called code-mixing) can occur in conversation between speakers turn or within a single speaker's turn.

According to Holmes (2013:34) and Meyernoff (2006:118), when code switching is constrained by where speaker happen to be, it is called domain-based or situational code switching and when it is constrained by who a speaker happens to be talking, it is called address-based. In addition, Wardhaugh (2006:104) mentioned it as situational and metaphorical. The situational code switching occurs when the language used change according to the situation; they speak one language in one situation and another in a different one, no topic change is involved. The metaphorical occurs when a change of topic require a change in the language used.

- a. Why do we code switch?

According to Holmes (2013:36-37) there are three reasons why do we code switch.

There are:

1) Situation

When there is an obvious change in the situation or to hide information from a third participant. For example: the arrival of someone

2) Topic

Achieve a better explanation of a certain concept. For example: when a teacher switches from English to Indonesian to make sure students understand what he says.

3) Social reason

- Signal solidarity and reduce social distance; this scale is useful in emphasizing that how well we know someone is a relevant factor in linguistic choice. In Wales, the choice between Meg and Mrs Billington involves consideration of this dimension, for instance. People's choice of Ranamal vs Bokmal in Hennesberget, or German rather than Italian in Sauris, similarly indicates the speaker's judgments about a relationship on this dimension.
- Increase social distance; concern about the participant relationship.
- Show off, impress or persuade an audience.
- Reflect one's ethnic identity.

4. Bilingualism and Multilingualism

Wardhaugh (2006:96) defines monolingual as the ability use only one language, is such a widely accepted norm in so many parts of the Western world that often assumed to be a world-wide phenomenon, to the extent that bilingual and multilingual may appear to be "unusual". Indeed, we have seen that someone is fluent in several languages, that many people are not “native” to the culture. Such people are likely to be immigrants, visitors, or children of mixed marriage.

Valdes (2012:86) said that, multilingualism has been defined, depending on the level of the competence and mastery of the languages spanning along a continuum. It favors a narrow definition argue that in order to be considered multilingual, the person should have native or native-like proficiency in each of the languages. In broader definition, bilingual and multilingual communities view bilingualism “as a common human condition that makes it possible for an individual to function, at some level, in more than one language. The key to this very broad and inclusive definition of bilingualism is more than one”.

In some occasions it is difficult to distinguish languages from dialect among dialects themselves. Wardhaugh (2006:97) states that attempts to distinguish people who are bilingual from those who are bidialectal may fail. There may be some doubt that very many people are actually bi- or even multi-dialectal. They may speak varieties which are distinctly different, but whether each separate variety is genuinely a dialect depends on how one defines dialect, which in not at all an easy matter to decide. In some cases, the bilingual-bidialectal distinction that speakers make reflects social, cultural, and political aspiration or realities rather than any linguistic reality.

In addition, Wardhaugh (2006:96) states that people who are bilingual or multilingual do not necessarily have exactly the same abilities or varieties in the languages. There is some situation may be exceptional. As Sridhar (1996:50) says, “multilingualism involving balanced, native like command of all the languages in the repertoire is rather uncommon. Typically, multilinguals have varying degrees of command of the different repertoires. The differences in competence in the various languages might range from command of a few lexical items, formulaic expressions such as greetings, and rudimentary conversational skills all the way to excellent command of the grammar and vocabulary and specialized register and styles.’ Sridhar adds: ‘Multilinguals develop competence in each of the codes to the extent that they need it and for the contexts in which each of the languages is used.’

The context determines language choice. In some society which more than one language or variety is used we must find out that uses what, when, and for what purpose. The language choices are part of the identity that claimed.

An interesting example of multilingualism has been described by Wardhaugh (2006:97-98) in his book that in Tukano, northwest Amazon, on the border between Colombia and Brazil (Sorensen, 1971). The Tukano are multilingual because the men must marry outside their language group; so, there is no man may have wife who speaks his language, for that kind of marriage relationship is forbidden and would be viewed as a kind of incest if they do. Men choose the women they marry from various neighboring ethnic group who speak other languages. And on marriage, women move into the men’s house. Consequently, in any village several language are used; the language of the men, the various languages of the women, and widespread regional language. Children are born into this multilingual environment; his/her father speaks one language, his/her mother another language, and other woman with whom the child has daily contact. Everyone in the community is interested in learning language, so most people can speak most of the languages. In fact, multilingualism is so usual that the Tokano are hardly conscious that they do speak different languages as they shift easily from one to another. They cannot tell an outsider how many languages they speak, and must be suitably to which languages they speak and to describe how well they speak each one. Multilingualism is a norm in the community. This is the result from the pattern of the marriage and the tradition. The communities are multilingual and no effort to suppress the variety of languages that are spoke.

Another bilingual situation has been described by Wardhaugh (2006:98-99) in Paraguay (Rubin, 1968). Because of the long isolation from Spain and the lack of Spanish-speaking population, an American Indian language, Guarani, has flourished in Paraguay to the extent that today, it is the mother tongue of about 90% of the population and a second language of several additional percent. So, Guarani as a national language and Spanish as the official language of government and the medium of education with the less than 7% population; in recent years Guarani used in primary education. In 1951 census just over half the population were bilingual in Guarani and Spanish. So, the Spanish is less known language in Paraguay. In the capital city, Asuncion, is almost entirely bilingual, but the further one goes into the countryside away and the Guarani-speaking population becomes monolingual.

In addition, Fishman (1980) called this “extended diglossic” in which Spanish is the H variety and Guarani the L variety. Because Spanish is the language that used on formal occasions such as; in government business, in conversation with stranger who are well dressed, and in most business transactions and the people use Guarani with friends, servants, when they jokes, and most casual occasions. So, Spanish is the preferred language of the cities, but Guarani is preferred in the countryside, and the lower class always uses it for just about every purpose in rural areas.

5. SEBATIK ISLAND

Sebatik Island belongs to two countries that are Indonesia and Malaysia. The southern part of Sebatik Island belongs to Indonesia and the northern belong to Malaysia. Sebatik Island is located between Nunukan, the capital of Nunukan District in Indonesia and Tawau, the capital of Tawau District in Malaysia. Geographically, this island located in coordinates 4⁰10’-4⁰10’10” north latitude and 117⁰54’-117⁰54’09” longitude east. Most of the inhabitants are migrants who came many places, mainly from South Sulawesi.

As a place that is close to Tawau, economically, the condition of Sebatik economic depends in Tawau. So, the inhabitants mostly go to Tawau to fulfill their principle commodity. Most of them need to know their language (Malay) to interact with them. It can makes their business deals easier. Sometimes, they mostly speak in malay with their business partner from Sebatik because they used to. Most of the inhabitants are opting to find a job in there. It cannot devoid that some of them married with the Malaysian.

Most of the Sebatik inhabitants are migrants who came from many places in Indonesia that have worked in Malaysia. But they cannot disappearing their mother language and vernacular language. It can cause their language influenced by malay. In interact with their surroundings, they adapted to with whom they talk to, what purpose, it conditioned.

As a place that many ethnic group in one place, the inhabitants need to know at least two languages to make them easier to interact with the others. There are some languages that used to use by the inhabitants: Indonesian as the mother language; the vernacular language from each ethnic groups (Bugis, Java, Dayak, Buton, NTT); Malay, the language that has influenced the native language in Sebatik.

It is hardly to claim what is the native language in Sebatik. Because the mostly language used in Sebatik is Indonesia which has been mixed with some of languages such as; Malay, vernacular language. In the writer's view of the phenomena of language use in Sebatik, the inhabitants mostly use their vernacular language and mix them with the other language. They put the other language in their vernacular language.

CHAPTER III

RESEARCH METHODOLOGY

This chapter deals with research design, the subject of the research, an instrument of the research, method of collecting data, and technique of analysis data.

A. Research Design

The writer used the descriptive qualitative method in order to answer the research question. It is an appropriate method to do this research because it is about describing the phenomenon of language choice in Sebatik. Hancock et al (2009:7) reveal that descriptive qualitative research is concerned with the developing of social phenomena. Based on that statement it will suitable to this research. It also uses strategies of inquiry such as narratives, phenomenologist, ethnographies, grounded theory studies, or case studies. This method flexibled to give the description of the phenomenon of language choice in Sebatik Island.

B. Subject of the Research

The writer focused in one village in Sebatik Island that is Aji Kuning, Sebatik Tengah based on the education domain; the second grade of SMP Negeri 1 Sebatik Tengah, a teacher and 32 students. Most of the students and the teachers of SMP Negeri 1 Sebatik Tengah mostly use some languages in their interaction, such as Malay, Bahasa, and vernacular language. So it could accidentally happen in their study activity in choosing which language will be used.

The respondents of this research are the students and teachers of SMP Negeri 1 Sebatik Tengah. For the student, the writer focused on 2nd grade and for the teacher; the writer focused on the teacher of Bahasa Indonesia subject.

C. Instrument of the Research

The instrument in this research used interview and observation. The interview and observation were used to collect the data and the writer transcribed, classified and analyzed the data based on the education domain.

D. Procedure of Collecting Data

In the procedure of collecting data that is used in this research divided into some steps, they are:

1. The writer joined the class, observes and record what language will be used in the class.
2. The writer observed and wrote down what language has been used.
3. The writer interviewed the teacher due to the interview guide.
4. The writer found the language choice due to the observation and interview guide.
5. The writer transcribed and analyzed the language choice based on education domain.

E. Technique of Data Analysis

After all of the data were obtained and in order to become accurate research, the writer analyzed using the appropriate approach which has been used. In this research used the descriptive qualitative method which divided in some steps as follow:

1. Analyzed the term of language choice in multilingual society.
2. Analyzed the term of some branch of sociolinguistic which is related to language choice.

3. Analyzed the language used in the society of Aji Kuning, Sebatik Tengah based on education domain.
4. Clasified the language choice based on the data which has been obtained.
5. Analyzed the language choice based on the data which has been obtained.
6. Concluded about the phenomenon of language choice in Sebatik in education domain.

CHAPTER IV

FINDING AND DISCUSSION

This chapter consists on finding and discussion

A. FINDINGS

In this part, consist of the language choice of Sebatik society in education domain.

1. The Language Choice of Sebatik Society in Education Domain

In the education, the writer found the situation of Language Choice Sebatik society in their interaction occurs the bilingual, multilingual, monolingual as personally, code switching and code mixing, and diglossia among their conversation. The formal medium of instruction is Indonesian. In fact, in the class they used Bahasa, Malay, and vernacular language among them. In this part; the bold and italic words indicates as Bahasa L language and Malay that occurred among the conversations and the bold, italic, and underlined words indicated as the correction in Bahasa.

Extract 1: The teacher gave the information to his student

Participant	Utterances	Language
Teacher	Assalamualaikum warahmatullahi wabarakatuh	Bahasa
Students	Wa'alaikumsalam warahmatullahi wabarakatuh	Bahasa
Teacher	Oke! Untuk hari ini, Ibu Sarinah tidak sempat masuk hari ini. Jadi, Ibu yang gantikan dulu. (Okay! For today, Ma'am Sarinah could not attend in the class. So, I replace her for today.)	Bahasa (L)+(H)
Students	Iyya, Bu!!! (Yes, Ma'am!)	Bahasa

Notes: (L) = low language
(H) = high language

Before the class started, Ibu Rohani as replacement teacher of Bahasa Indonesia subject gave the information that Ibu Sarina could not attend the class. Based on the conversation above, it showed that the teacher is diglossia when she switched the H language and L language in her class such as “oke (okay)” in H language “baiklah (alrigh/well)” and following the H language. In doing interaction with the students, the teacher mostly used Bahasa which showed she is monolingual as personally.

Extract 2: The teacher gave the explanation about the subject

Participant	Utterances	Language
Teacher	Perhatikan! Materi untuk hari ini, mendengarkan dan menganalisis laporan. (Attention please! Today, The materials are listening and analyze the report.)	Bahasa (H)
Students	Iyya, Bu. (Yes, Ma'am)	Bahasa (H)
Teacher	Buka halaman delapan belas (18)! Jadi untuk hari ini, Ibu akan membacakan sebuah laporan perjalanan, kemudian siswa mendengarkan atau menyimak apa yang Ibubacakan. (Have a look on the eighteen pages! So today, I will read a trip report, then the student must listen and scrutinize of what I will read.)	Bahasa (H)
Students	Iyya Bu. (Yes, Ma'am)	Bahasa (H)
Teacher	Jadi petunjuknya, sebelum Ibu bacakan laporan perjalanannya, perhatikan petunjuknya! (So the instruction is, before I read the trip report, let you see the instruction)	Bahasa (H)

Notes: (H) = high language

Based on the conversation above, the teacher mostly used Bahasa H language in giving explanation which showed that she is monolingual as personally and the diglossia occurs in this extract.

Extract 3: The student asked her friend to throw away the bubble gum from his mouth

Participant	Utterances	Language
Student A	Permenmu! (Your candy!)	Bahasa
Student B	Apa? (What?)	Bahasa
Student A	Buang permenmu! Gula-gula getahmu buang! (Throw out your candy! Throw out your chewing gum)	Bahasa+ Malay

While the class was going on, there was a student who is chewing a chewing gum. She spoke out loud to makes the teacher know about her friend attitude. Based on the conversation above, it showed that the bilingual occurs in the education domain. In the beginning of the conversation student A used Bahasa “Permenmu (your candy)” to reprimand her friend. Student B said, “apa? (what?)” in consideration to showed he lied that did not listen to what she said. In the last conversation, student A said, “Buang permenmu! Gula-gula getahmu buang!” in Indonesian “Buang permen karetmu! (Throw out your chewing gum)” It is showed that she mixed her language from Bahasa to Malay in consideration to makes clear what she said.

Extract 4: The teacher gave the instruction to close their textbook

Participant	Utterances	Language
Teacher	Perhatikan dulu! Sekarang, tutup buku paketnya! (Attention please! Now, close the textbook!)	Bahasa
Student a	Adduh! (Oh my!)	Bahasa
Student b	Awwah! (Oh my!)	Bahasa
Student c	Aiii! (Oh my!)	Bahasa
Teacher	Ditutup! Selain Ibu, jangan ada yang bersuara! (Close it! Do not sound except me!)	Bahasa
Students	Iyya, Bu! (Yes, Ma'am!)	Bahasa
Teacher	Ibu akan membacakan sebuah laporan perjalanan. Kemudian, siswa mencatat yang penting-penting saja! Oke , mulai? (I will read the trip report. And then, the student writes down the point of the report! Okay, start?)	Bahasa (H) + (L)

Before the teacher read the trip report, she asked the student to close their book. Based on the conversation above, some students choose the different word to express the disaffection expression. When the teacher asked them to close their textbook, student A said, “aduh!” Aduh, commonly used in the situation when someone gets shocking hurt such as; get stabbed. In the different word, student B said, “Awwah!” Awwah, commonly used in the situation when someone dejected after doing something wrong such as; “awwah, kenapa begini jadinya?!”. And the next word is “Aiii”, commonly used to express the confusing such as “aiii, apa kau bikin ini?(oh my, what are you doing?)” In the last conversation, the same case that happened in extract 1 occurs in this conversation. The teacher used the H language in her first and second sentences and following L language in her last sentences. But “oke” in extract 1 has a different purpose in using it with “oke” in extract 4. In extract 1, it was used to opened the conversation and in extract 4, used to asking the student that are they ready because it is following by a word, “mulai?” it is showed that the teacher is monolingual as personally and the students are monolingual as personally.

Extract 5: The student asked her friend to keep quite

Participant	Utterances	Language
Student a	Tunggu dulu, Bu! (Wait me, Ma'am!)	Bahasa
Student b	Di buku apa, Bu? (Which book, Ma'am?)	Bahasa
Students	Buku tugas! (The task book!)	Bahasa
Student b	Buku apa? (What book?)	Bahasa
Student d	Buku Bahasa Inggris! (English Book!)	Bahasa
Student c	Buku tugas! (The task book!)	Bahasa

Student e	Bising ba! (Too noisy!)	Malay
Student c	Diam-diamlah! Ribut semua juga ba! (Please, keep silent! All of you are too noisy!)	Malay + Bahasa

Before the teacher read the book, most of the student yelled each other, and some students asked to the teacher by yelling. Some of them answered what they yelled about with the yelling too. Based on the conversation above, some student used the Bahasa and some of them used Malay, it showed that monolingual and bilingual occurs in this conversation. As what student C said, “Diam-diamlah! Ribut semua juga ba.” In Bahasa, “Diam!Ribut semua.” In Malay, prefix “lah” often used in daily conversation. “Ba” is augmentation in Malay such as “ji,mi” in Makassarese. She is even did code mixing at the same time. However, student E is monolingual as personally, she said, “Bising ba!” in Bahasa “ribut”.

Extract 6: The student’s interruptions while the teacher read the book

Participant	Utterances	Language
Student a	Bu! Laju-laju, Bu! (Ma’am! Be rapidly, Ma’am!)	Malay + Bahasa
Student b	Bu! Ulang, Bu! (Ma’am! Repeat it, Ma’am)	Bahasa
Student c	Santai saja, Bu! (Be more relax, Ma’am!)	Bahasa
Student d	Pelan-pelan, Bu! (Be slowly, Ma’am!)	Bahasa
Student e	Relax, slow! Baca satu-satu, Bu! A, B, C... (Relax, just slow! Read it one by one, Ma’am! Like A,B,C...)	English+ Malay + Bahasa
Teacher	Diam! (Keep silent!)	Bahasa
Students	Ulang, Bu! (Repeat it, Ma’am)	Bahasa
Student a	Aduh, Bu! Tunggu sekejap ba, Bu! (Please, Ma’am! Wait me for a moment, Ma’am!)	Bahasa + Malay

While the teacher was reading the textbook, some students could not get the idea of what the teacher read. So, when the teacher stopped reading, some student makes some noise and some of them asked the teacher to repeat it. Based on the conversation above, code mixing occurred in the first conversation; when student A said, “laju-laju, Bu!” in Indonesian “cepat-cepat, Bu”. In Malay, commonly used “laju”, in Bahasa, commonly used “cepat”. Laju and cepat related to movement. Often, we confused in using it. We mostly used the word “mobil itu mempunyai kecepatan 40km/jam”, the correct one is “mobil itu mempunyai kelajuan 40km/jam”. Kecepatan can be used in a sentence such as, “mobil itu mempunyai kecepatan 40km/jam menuju arah Utara”. So, the difference between “laju” and “cepat” is the purpose of direction. The same case occurs when student A said, “Tunggu sekejap ba, Bu!” in Indonesian “Tunggu sebentar, Bu!” Code switching also occurred in this conversation, when student E said, “Relax, slow! Baca satu-satu, Bu!” in Indonesian “Santai, pelan-pelan! Bacasatu per satu, Bu!” It showed that the student A and E are bilingual.

Extract 7: The student asked her friend to listen to the teacher well

Participant	Utterances	Language
Student a	Meliat apa,,, Bu? Bu! (See what,,, Ma'am? Ma'am!)	Bahasa (L)
Student b	Gua Batu! Makanya dengar ba!!! (Stone Cave! So, please! Listen to the teacher well!)	Bahasa + Malay

Some students sometimes could not listening well what the teacher read. Based on the conversation above, student A said, “meliat apa,,, Bu?” It showed that she is diglossia when she used the L language, “meliat” in H language “melihat”. When student B answered the student

A, she mixed with the augmentation “ba”. The same cases that happened in extract 5 and 6. The augmentation “ba” functioned as pressing.

Extract 8: The student report to the teacher that her friend was cheating

Participant	Utterances	Language
Student a	Bu! Da liat buku, Bu! (Ma'am! He looks the textbook, Ma'am!)	Bahasa + vernacular language (Papua dialect)
Student b	E orang liat soal kah . (Noo, I am looking the question!)	Bahasa + vernacular language (Papua dialect)

In this conversation, when student A said, “Da” in Bahasa “Dia”, it showed that she used her mother tongue and she mix with the Bahasa L language “liat” in H language “lihat”. In addition, when student B said, “E”, in their daily conversation mostly used “E”. In difference cases when student B said, “Kah” following by his dialect. It showed that they are bilingual.

Extract 9: The student asks his friend to stop disturb her

Participant	Utterances	Language
Student a	Tak payah ba! (Please, do not!)	Malay

Based on the conversation above, when student A said, “Tak payah ba!” in Bahasa “Tidak usah!” It showed that the student is monolingual as personally. The augmentation “ba” here mean that she really did not want to get some annoyance and functioned as pressing.

Extract 10: The student reprimanded to her friend

Participant	Utterances	Language
Student a	Tampar ni orang satu ni! Kurang ajar betul! Kenapa kau ketawa?! (I will slap you! Too insolent! Why do you laugh?!)	Malay + Bahasa

Based on the conversation above, it showed that the student is bilingual and mixed and switched her language. When she said, “Tampar ni orang satu ni!” In Malay mostly used “ni” and “orang satu” as a direct clearance to the related people, in Bahasa mostly used “kau” such as “Ku tampar kau”. For the example: in Sebatik (Malay) “apa juga ni satu anak ni?” and (Bahasa) “apa juga kau itu?(what is wrong with you?)”. In addition, when she said, “Kurang ajar betul” in Bahasa “Kurang ajar sekali or sangat kurang ajar”, In Bahasa mostly used “betul” to show the adjective after too, so, very, etc and Bahasa mostly used “sekali and sangat”. She switched her language to Bahasa at the last of her utterance, “kenapa kau ketawa”.

Extract 11: The student asked a question to her teacher

Participant	Utterances	Language
Student a	Pokok-pokoknya syak , kan Bu? Pokok-pokok ceritanya. (Just the point, is not it Ma'am? Just the point)	Malay + Bahasa
Teacher	Iyya. (Yes.)	Bahasa

Based on the conversation above, when student A said, “Pokok-pokoknya syak, kan Bu?” in Bahasa “Pokok-pokok ceritanya saja, ia kan Bu?” it showed that she mixed her language. In Malay “syak” means “saja or sahaja(just)” in Bahasa. It could be concluded that the student is bilingual.

Extract 12: The teacher asked her student to have a discussion with their seatmate

Participant	Utterances	Language
Teacher	Jadi, yang sebentar dikumpul adalah kesimpulan atau inti dari laporan perjalanan 50 Hari Pertualangan di Tanah Papua.(So, the conclusion or the point of the trip of The Adventure in Land of Papua in 50 Days will be collected later.)	Bahasa (H)

Student a	Yes, Bu.	English + Bahasa
Student b	Yes, Madam.	English

Based on the conversation above, the teacher showed the diglossic situation when she used the Indonesian H language in giving instruction to her student. Differ from her student, when student A said, “Yes, Bu”, he mixed his language with “Bu”. Another side, student B said, “Yes, Madam.” It showed that the student A did a code mixing.

Extract 13: The student told the teacher that some of them were cheated

Participant	Utterances	Language
Student a	Bu! Ica buka bukunya di laci, Bu. (Ma'am! Ica looks her textbook in his drawer, Ma'am)	Bahasa
Student b	Haiii! (Noo!!!)	Bahasa
Student c	Siapa? (Who?)	Bahasa
Student b	Bu! Buku paket dikumpul semua syak alang-alang , Bu! (Ma'am! Just collect the textbook, Ma'am!)	Bahasa + Malay
Student a	Ia, Bu! Kumpullah, Bu! (Yes, Ma'am! Just collect it, Ma'am)	Bahasa + Malay
Student b	Kumpullah syak semua, Bu! (Just collect all of them, Ma'am!)	Bahasa + Malay
Student a	Iyya, Bu! (Yes, Ma'am!)	Bahasa
Student d	Kau ndak mau kumpulkah? (You do not want collect it, do you?)	Bahasa (L)
Student e	Kumpul bikin apa? (What for?)	Bahasa + Malay
Student f	Kalian kenapa juga bising betul ? (Why all of you so noisy?)	Bahasa + Malay
Teacher	Oke! Dengarkan dulu namanya! (Okay! Listen to your name first!)	Bahasa (L)+(H)

Based on the conversation above, student B mixed his language when he said, “Buku paket dikumpul semua syak alang-alang, Bu!” in Bahasa “Buku paket dikumpul semua saja” sekalian, Bu!” In Malay, alang-alang could also mean gampang/enteng (easy) and lebih baik/lebih bagus (better). It depended on its sentence context such as “alang-alang syak itu, nantilah dikerjakan (this is easy, we can do it later)” which means “gampang saja itu, sebentar dikerjakan”. In addition, when student A said, “kumpul bikinapa?” In Bahasa “Buat apa dikumpul?” or “Kenapa mau dikumpul?”, and student F said, “Kalian kenapa juga bising betul?” in Bahasa “Kalian kenapa juga ribut sekali?”. The same case which happened in extracts 10. In different cases when he said, “haiii!!!” which means to express his self defense, do not mean to greeting. A diglossic situation also occurred when student A and B said, “kumpullah”. In Sebantik society, we used prefix “-lah” in doing communication with some older than us, its sound more polite. In addition, when student E said, “kau ndak mau kumpulkah?” in H language “kau tidak mau kumpulkah?” and when the teacher said, “Oke! Dengarkan dulu namanya!” in H language “Baiklah! Dengarkan dulu namanya!”. It could be concluded that they are bilingual.

Extract 14: The student’s utterances while the teacher took attendances

Participant	Utterances	Language
Teacher	Alan!
Students	Pindah, Bu! (Move away, Ma’am!)	Bahasa
Student a	Bu! Tiga kali sudah pindah, Bu! (Ma’am! It has been three times he transferred, Ma’am!)	Bahasa (L)
Student b	Apa juga budak satu ini? ! (What is your problem?!)	Bahasa + Malay
Student c	Diam, ba! (Please, keep silent!)	Bahasa + Malay
Student d	Engkalinga wek! (Listen it well!)	Vernacular language (buginesse)
Student e	Iyya kan! (Is not it!)	Bahasa

Based on the conversation above, when student A said, “Tiga kali sudah pindah, Bu.” in H language “Sudah tiga kali pindah, Bu.” It showed that student A was doing diglossic situation, in Sebatik mostly used “sudah” at the last sentence such as “ada sudah?” in H language “sudah ada”. In addition when student E said, “Ia kan!” in Sebatik society mostly use “ia kan” to justification that what the people said is right and as confirmation. A bilingual and code mixing situations occurred which the same case occurred in section 1 extract 10 when student B said, “Apa juga budak satu ini” in Bahasa “apa jugakau itu” or “kenapa juga kau itu”. In addition when student C said, “Diam, ba!” in Bahasa “Tolong diam”, augmentation “Ba” here means to begging someone. Student D is monolingual as personally when he said, “Engkalinga wek!” in Bahasa “Dengarkan itu!”

Extract 15: The student interruption before the teacher asked some questions

Participant	Utterances	Language
Teacher	Oke! Sekarang Ibu kasih kesempatan, sebelum ibu mengajukan pertanyaan... (Okay! Now, I give the chances, before I ask some questions...)	Bahasa (L)+(H)
Student a	Asyik! (Yeahhh!)	Bahasa
Student b	Ibu kasih pertanyaan, Bu? (You give the question, Ma'am?)	Bahasa (L)
Student a	Baca satu kali lagi! (Read once more!)	Bahasa + Malay
Student c	Buat pertanyaan kah Bu? (Makes the question, Ma'am?)	Bahasa
Student a	Buat-buat-buat-buat (Make it-make it-make it-make it)	Bahasa
Student d	Adoi! (Oh, nooo!)	Malay
Teacher	Perhatikan! (Listen!)	Bahasa
Students	(Makes some noise)
Student e	Diamlah! (Just shut up!)	Bahasa + Malay

Teacher	Perhatikan! Sebelum Ibu mengajukan pertanyaan, baca kembali kesimpulan laporan yang telah kalian tulis! (Listen! Before I give some questions, read the conclusion which you wrote down again!)	Bahasa (H)
---------	---	------------

Based on the conversation above, when the teacher said, “oke” in H language “baiklah” following by H language, it showed that she was doing a diglossic situation. In addition, when student B said, “kasih” in H language “beri”. At the last conversation she chooses H language in giving instruction. In different case, when student A said, “baca satu kali lagi” in Bahasa “baca sekali lagi”, it showed that he mixed his language. In Melayu mostly used “satu” when express amount which start with “satu”, for the examples; “satu ringgit” in Bahasa “seringgit”, “satu ribu” in Bahasa “seribu”, “satu biji” in Bahasa “sebij”, etc. Student E also mixed the word with “lah” when she said, “Diamlah!”. In this conversation, when student D said, “adoi!” it showed that he is monolingual as personally. In Malay mostly used “adoi” in disaffection expression, it also could be means “huuu” in Bahasa when someone gets yells.

Extract 16: The teacher asked the student to close their book

Participant	Utterances	Language
Teacher	Oke , sekarang, tutup bukunya masing-masing! (Okay, now, close your book!)	Bahasa (L)
Student a	Kumpul syak , Bu! Nanti ada yang main culas tu , Bu. (Just collect it, Ma'am! There will be cheating later, Ma'am.)	Malay + Bahasa
Student b	Iyya, Bu! (Yes, Ma'am!)	Bahasa

Based on the conversation above, when student A said, “Kumpul syak, Bu!” it showed that he mixed his language with the word “syak” in Bahasa “saja” and following by his next expression “nanti ada yang main culas tu, Bu.” In Bahasa “nanti ada yang main curang, Bu.”

In Melayu mostly used “culas” and in Bahasa mostly used “curang”. In Malay “tu” mostly used as “ba” and have a same position as pressing and also could be means joking about what someone said, such as “ialah tu”. So, it depended on the sentence context such as when we gave an appreciation to someone, we said, “macam tulah” in Bahasa means “begitu”.

Extract 17: The teacher asked some question to her students

Based on the conversation above, it can be found that the teacher in giving some questions mostly used Bahasa H language. However, she sometime mixed it with L language in started the next questions, as shown when she said, “oke” in H language “baiklah”. The student mostly used Bahasa in answered the question, but they mixed it with Malay in interrupting about the other things or having chitchat with their friend. Such as when student A reported to the teacher that her friend was cheating, she said, “main culas dia, Bu!” in Bahasa “curang dia, Bu!”; when she asked a question to the teacher, she said, “bisa dobol-dobolkah, Bu?” in Bahasa “bisa dua kalikah, Bu” or “bisa terulang-ulangkah, Bu?”; when she thought her friend was cheating and yelling, “tengok buku!!!” in Bahasa “lihat buku”; when she begged the teacher to give her answered the question, “Aku ba, Bu” in Bahasa “saya saja, Bu”; when she said, “dak papa liat bukukah?” in Bahasa “tidak apa-apa lihat bukukah?”; and when she said, “diam ba” in Bahasa “diam”. In addition, students D choose to mixed with English, “cancel” in Bahasa “batal”. In this conversation the word “cancel” mostly used in Malay to express cancelled. When student A and D gave an applause for their friend, they used Malay; they said, “tepoklah sikit” in Bahasa “tepuik tangan”. When student D said, “Belum selesai si Ain” in Bahasa “Belum selesai Ain”, in Malay mostly used “si” to refers to the someone and mostly followed the name of that people, in Bahasa sometimes used “si” when the name of that people is unknown or the name of those with whom the speaker is intimate; such as “si penerima (the receiver)”, “bagian untuk si anak (for the child)”, “si kecil (the little)”, “si terhukum (the condemned)”, etc.

- a. The teacher talked to the student.

The teacher mostly used Bahasa H language when she giving the information as shown in extract 1, giving explanation about the subject as shown in extract 2, giving the instruction as shown in extract 4, extract 12 and 16, ask the student to keep quite as shown in extract 6, answering the student’s question about the subject in extract 11, before she give some question as shown in extract 15 at the last of the conversation, and in giving some questions about the subject materials to the student as shown in extract 17. However, she sometimes switched the Bahasa, from the L language to the Indonesian H language when she opened his information as shown in extract 1 with “oke” following the H language. The same cases occur when she want to start read the trip report at the last of the conversation as shown in extract 4, when she want to takes the attendance of the student as shown in extract 13 at the last of the conversation, when she want to start her instruction as shown in extract 15 at the first conversation and in extract 16 at the first conversation, and as shown in extract in extract 17 when she start the first question and the third question. In addition, she mixed Indonesian H language with L language as shown in extract 17 when she said,” Dengar ya! Endak boleh!” in H language “Dengar ya! Tidak boleh!” It showed that she is monolingual, diglossia, and sometimes switched and mixed her language.

b. The student talked to the teacher

Based on the description above the student mostly used Bahasa when communicates with the teacher. However sometimes they mixed Bahasa H language with Indonesian L language, Bahasa with Malay, and Bahasa with their vernacular language.

They mostly used Bahasa in responds the information from the teacher as shown in extract 1, in responds about the subject explanation as shown in extract 2, in responds to the teacher instruction as shown in extract 4, inasking the teacher about which book they need to used as shown by student A, B, and C in extract 5, in interruptingwhile the teacher reads the trip report as shown by student B, C, and D in extract 6, in reporting that some of them were cheated as shown by student C in extract 13, in answering the teacher question about their friend as shown by student E in extract 14, in interruption before the teacher ask some question as shown by student C in extract 15, and in answering the question about the trip report as shown by Erwinsyah, student E, Ridho, student A, student F, in extract 17.

They sometimes mixed the Bahasa H language with L language when they asking the teacher to repeat the reading as shown by student A in extract 7, giving the explanation their friend as shown by student A in extract 14, interrupting before the teacher ask some question as shown by student B in extract 15, and asking the teacher to gives the permission to look the textbook as shown by student A and asking the teacher to give him the chances answering the question as shown by student E in extract 17.

They sometimes mixed Bahasa with Malay when they interrupting while the teacher reads the trip report as shown by student A and E in extract 6, asking the question about the task as shown by student A in extract 11, asking the teacher to collect their textbook as shown by student A, B, E, and F in extract 13; in addition, as shown by student A in extract 16, report to the teacher that their friend was cheating as shown by student A in extract 17, asking the teacher that is she could answering the question twice as shown by student A in extract 17, and asking the teacher to give her chance to answer the question as shown by student A in extract 17.

There is one student used Bahasa mixed with her vernacular language (Papua dialect) when she report to the teacher that her friend was cheating as shown by student A in extract 8

In addition there are students used English when they responding to the teacher's instruction as shown by student A and B in extract 12, as shown by student E in extract 6, and as shown by student D in extract 17.

c. The students talked among them

They mostly mixed Bahasa with Malay when they communicate each other. However, sometimes they sometimes used Bahasa, Malay, and some of them used their vernacular language.

They used Bahasa when they giving the explanation to their friend about what book will be used as shown in extract 5, asking her friend to collect his textbook as shown by student E in extract 13, and interrupting while their friend answer the question as shown by students B and F in extract 17.

They used Malay when yelling about the situation of the class is too noisy as shown by student E in extract 5, asking her friend to stop disturb her as shown by student A in extract 9, and giving applause to their friend as shown by student A and B in extract 17.

They mixed Bahasa with Malay when student A asking her friend to throw away his chewing gum as shown by student A in extract 3, asking her friends to keep quite as shown by student C in extract 5, as shown by student F in extract 13, as shown by student C in extract 14, as shown by student E in extract 15, and as shown by student A in extract 17, asking her friend to listen to the teacher well as shown by student B in extract 7, reprimand to her friend as shown in extract 10, dejecting his friend when she ask him to collect his textbook as shown by student E in extract 13, asking her friend to stop disturb her as shown by student B in extract 14, asking his friend to read their conclusion once again as shown in by student A in extract 15, defense her friend to give her chance to answer the question well as shown by student D in extract 17. In addition, there are some student used their vernacular language as shown by student B in extract 8 and as shown by student D in extract 14.

Based on the description above, the teacher mostly used Bahasa H language when she interacted with the student, the student mostly used Bahasa and Malay when they interacted with the teacher, and the student mostly used Bahasa and Malay when they interacted each other and used their vernacular language among them. It can be concluded that as the society they are multilingual.

B. DISCUSSION

This part extends the interpretation of the situation Language Choice in Sebatik Society in education domain through interview then will be followed directly by the explanation about the result of the observation.

Based on the data which was obtained, the situation of language used showed that the phenomenon of language choice occurred, Bahasa as the formal medium instruction, the teacher mostly used Indonesian H language when she interact with the student, the student mostly used Bahasa and Malay when they interact with the teacher, and the student mostly used Bahasa and Malay when they interact each other and used their vernacular language among them. Valentino (2013) found, in his education domain showed English as the formal medium instruction because their major study is English Language Education, most of the participant spoke English to their lecture, some of them used English and Bahasa when communicate to their lecture.

Based on data analysis, the Sebatik society which focused at SMP Negeri 1 Sebatik Tengah is diglossia. It can be seen on the data analysis that showed the roles the High and Low varieties as Holmes (2013: 27) states that diglossia has three crucial features:

- a. Two distinct varieties of the same language are used in the community, with one regarded as a high (H) variety and low (L) variety. The two varieties are linguistically related, the relationship is closer in some cases than others.
- b. Each variety is used for variety quite function. H and L complement each other. Most of the vocabulary of H and L is the same.
- c. No one used the H variety in daily conversation. For example in school, it taught and for very formal interaction.

Based on the data analysis, the Sebatik society education domain mostly used Bahasa, Malay and sometimes used vernacular language in communicate among them. It showed that they sometimes mixed it or even switched it. As Holmes (2013:36-37) states that code mixing and code switching may happen because of situation, topic, and social reason.

- a. Situation: when there is an obvious change in the situation or to hide information from a third participant.
- b. Topic: achieve a better explanation of a certain concept.
- c. Social reason: Signal solidarity and reduce social distance, increase social distance, show off; impress or persuade an audience, and reflect one's ethnic identity.

Based on data analysis, the Sebatik society in education domain is bilingual. As Wardhaugh (2006:96) states that some is fluent in several languages, that many people are not native to the culture. Such people are likely to be immigrant, visitors, and children of mixed marriage. In addition, Valdes (2012:86) states that, bilingual and multilingual communities view bilingualism as a common human condition that makes it possible for an individual to function, at some level, in more than one language. It is related with the Sebatik Island condition, and the student's background. In addition, based on the result of interview, it said that because they inclined to use Malay. And most of them, their parent live in Malaysia, but their child school at here. So indeed, the influence of Malay is too strong. So, we ask the student to minimize using Malay. It indicated language choice occurs in bilingual community.

Based on the discussion above, it can be concluded that phenomenon of language choice in Sebatik which focus at SMP Negeri 1 Sebatik Tengah is occurs; they mostly used Bahasa, Malay, and sometimes used their vernacular language among them; and as diglossia and multilingual community.

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

This chapter extends the conclusion and suggestion based on the finding and discussion of the data analysis.

A. Conclusions

Based on the finding and discussion in the previous chapter, the writer concluded that Phenomenon of Language Choice in Sebatik which focused at SMP Negeri 1 Sebatik in education domain was occurred. It explained in several ways specifically and generally in Phenomenon of Language Choice in Sebatik (Malaysia-Indonesia border). It put forwarded some conclusion as follows:

1. The Language Choice in Sebatik society in education domain.

The teacher gives the information to his student, The teacher gives the explanation about the subject, The student ask her friend to throw away the bubble gum from his mouth, The teacher give the instruction to close their textbook, The student asked her friend to keep quiet, The student's interruptions while the teacher reading the book, The student asked her friend to listen to the teacher well, The student report to the teacher that her friend was cheating, The student asks her friend to stop disturb her, The student reprimand to her friend, The student asked a question to her teacher, and The teacher asked her student to having discussion with their seatmate. The student told the teacher that some of them were cheated, The student's utterances while the teacher takes attendances, The student interruption before the teacher asked some questions, and The teacher ask the student to close their book. The teacher asks some question to her students. The situation of language use in phenomenon of language choice in Sebatik occur the bilingual, multilingual, monolingual as personally, diglossia, code switching and code mixing among their conversation.

It can be concluded that phenomenon of language choice in Sebatik which focused at SMP Negeri 1 Sebatik Tengah was occurred; they mostly used Bahasa, Malay, and sometimes used their vernacular language among them; and as diglossia and multilingual community. The data indicated that they mostly used Bahasa and Malay, and sometimes they used their vernacular language among them.

B. Suggestions

The writer proposed some suggestions as follows:

1. In choosing which language will be used, do not ever forget your mother tongue, it is shows your identity.
2. Since the writer identified The Phenomenon of Language Choice in Sebatik (Indonesia-Malaysia border) that it is related to Language Shift, which are categorized as linguistic phenomena. So it can be compared and make the research and the data much better.

APPENDICES

Appendix I: Transcription

In the education domain, it takes place at SMP Negeri 1 Sebatik Tengah, in the class of second grade, 25th July 2017. The duration of the recording is 51:06 minutes which divided in three sections, section 1: giving explanation, section 2: giving assignment and section 3: giving questions.

Section 1: Giving Explanation

Ibu Rohani as replacement teacher of Bahasa Indonesia. She came in to the class with the textbook in her hand. She wore a pink hijab, pink shirt, and black skirt. After she put the textbook on the table and sit down. And the student, the men wore the white blue uniform with symbol of Indonesia at the right arm of their shirt, blue necktie, and short blue trouser. The women, some of them wore the white hijab, white long arm shirt with symbol of Indonesia at the right arm of their shirt, blue necktie, and long blue skirt and some of them wore white short arm shirt with symbol of Indonesia at the right arm of their shirt, blue necktie, and short blue skirt. The chairman of the class is a woman wore the white hijab, white long arm shirt with symbol of Indonesia at the right arm of their shirt, blue necktie, and long blue skirt said, “Seluruhnya! Siap, gerak!” (Fellows! Ready, go!). All of the student stand up and the teacher stand up, she said, “Beri salam kepada Ibu guru!” (Greeting to the teacher!) and they said, “Assalamua’laikum warahmatullahi wabarakatu”. The teacher answered, “Wa’alaikumsalam warahmatullahi wabarakatu”. After all of student and the teacher sit down, she continue her next instruction, “Sebelum kita belajar, marilah kita berdoa menurut iman dan kepercayaan kita masing-masing!”

(Before we study, lets pray acording to our faith and believe!). They bow for some minutes and after that, she said, “Berdoa selesai!” (Praying is done!).

Extract 1: The teacher gave the information to his student

Ibu Rohani as replacement teacher of Bahasa Indonesia, she walked to the front of the class and gives the information that Ibu Sarinah could not attend in the class. First she said, “Assalamua’laikum warahmatullahi wabarakatu”. And the student answered, “Wa’alaikumsalam warahmatullahi wabarakatu”. There were some student who make some noice at the back of class. And she looked at them and said, “Yang dibelakang!” (The back one!). The student silent and look to her. After all of the student were ready, she said, “Oke! Untuk hari ini, Ibu Sarinah tidak sempat masuk hari ini. Jadi, Ibu yang gantikan dulu”. (Okay! For today, Ma’am Sarinah could not attend in the class. So, I replace her for today). The student answered it at once, “Ia Bu!!!” (Yes, Ma’am!!!)

Extract 2: The teacher gave the explanation about the subject

Transcription of interview

The writer asked the respondent, Ibu Rohan, S.Pd. in the teacher office, “Eee baiklah, pertanyaan pertama itu, bahasa apa yang anda gunakan dalam kegiatan belajar anda? Eee, dalam kegiatan belajar di sini maksudnya yang belajar-mengajar itu... dalam kelas.” (Eee well, the first question is, what language did you used in your study activity?) She answered, “Eee langsung ya, kalau kami, karena selaku guru Bahasa Indonesia pasti kami terapkan Bahasa Indonesia yang baik dan benar, demikian juga kepada siswa diwajibkan menggunakan Bahasa Indonesia yang baik dan benar.” (Eee straightaway, for us, because as the teacher of Bahasa, surely we applied the good and correct Bahasa.) After the first question finished, the writer asked the second question, “Kemudian beralih ke pertanyaan kedua. Eee, apakah anda terkadang menggunakan dua bahasa dalam keadaan tertentu dalam kegiatan belajar? eee...” (Then we move to the second question. Eee, do you sometime used two languages in certain occasion in study activity? eee...)

The respondent answered, “Kalau saya pribadi meminimalisir penggunaan bahasa lain, terutama bahasa daerah.” (For me personally minimized using another language, especially vernacular language.) and the writer butted in, “Iye.” (yes) then she continued answering the question, “karena saya sendiri tekankan menggunakan bahasa Indonesia, seperti itu. Karena di sini pengaruh Bahasa Malaysia kental sekali tapi eee, saya sudah minta sama anak-anak supaya belajar cari padanan katanya dalam Bahasa Indonesia setiap mau bertanya ataupun menjawab pertanyaan, seperti itu.” (because I myself emphasized used Bahasa, like that. Because in here the influencing of Malay too strong but eee, I have asked the students to learn looking for the match word in Bahasa in asking or answering the question, like that.) The writer continued asking the third question, “kemudian pertanyaan ketiga. Eee, bahasa apa yang anda gunakan dalam lingkungan keluarga anda?” (then the third question. Eee, what language did you use in your family domain.) The respondent answered, “Kalau dalam lingkungan keluarga, ya karena... eee... keluarga masih berdarah bugis, suku bugis, kadang menggunakan Bahasa Indonesia, terkadang menggunakan Bahasa Daerah.” (For family domain, well because... eee... my family is buginess blooded, buginess, sometime used Bahasa, sometime used vernacular language.) Then the writer continued asking which was related about the third question, “jadi itu dicampur Bu, ya.” (so it was mixed Ma'am, right.) and she said, “Ya dicampur, karena kalau kita tidak kenalkan bahasa daerah ke anak, nanti dia lupa asal usul dirinya, siapa keluarganya.” (Right it was mixed, because if we did not let the children know the vernacular language, they will forget about their background, their family.) both the writer and respondent were smiled and laughed. After that, the writer asked the fourth question, “kemudian, eee.. dalam kegiatan belajar, melihat dari sisi murid anda bahasa apa yang membuat mereka lebih mudah mengerti dalam kegiatan belajar-mengajarnya Bu?” (then, eee... in study activity, looking from your student’s side what language did make them easier understood in study activity?) the respondent answered, “Bahasa yang mudah dimengerti, kalau bahasa Indonesia, mereka mudah paham. Namun kita lihat lagi, dikondisikan, karena kadang ada tatanan bahasa yang cocok untuk anak SD, SMP, SMA. Dilihat tingkatannya lagi. Ada bahasa yang memang mudah dipahami, kalau kita terlalu banyak menggunakan istilah-istilah, dia sulit dipahami.” (The easily understood language, if Bahasa, they easily to understood. But we see again, conditioned it, because sometime there is grammatical language which suitable for the elementary school, junior high school, senior high school. According to the level again. There is language which hardly to understood.) the writer butted in, “ow iye, apa lagi...” (ya, furthermore...) and she continued it, “ya, apa lagi dicampur dengan istilah-istilah asing atau ini, iya, cari dulu maknanya di kamus.” (ya, furthermore if it mixed with foreign terms or this, right, looking for the meaning first in dictionary.) the writer said, “iye’-iye” (right) then she continued it, “Jadi kita sesuaikan dulu dengan kelas katanya.” (so, we have to matched the word class before.) After she finished answering the question, the writer continued asking the last question, “eee, kemudian yang terakhir. Menghadapi siswa yang lebih banyak menggunakan Bahasa Melayu atau bahasa daerahnya dalam berinteraksi, eee kita selaku guru Bahasa Indonesia, bagaimana menurutta’? Faktor apa yang membuat mereka lebih memilih bahasa yang mereka dapatkan dari lingkungan keluarga mereka dalam kegiatan belajar-mengajarnya. Kan, terkadang mereka berinteraksi dengan temannya, misalnya minta buku, kayak begitu... lebih memilih bahasa yang mereka dapatkan di lingkungannya sendiri daripada eee... yang kita ajarkan. Begitu maksudnya Bu.” (eee then the last one. Facing with the student who inclined to used Malay or their vernacular language in doing interaction, eee you as the teacher of Bahasa, for you how about? What factors did make them be opting to used language which they got from their family domain in study activity. Well, sometime when they interact with their friend, for example requesting book, like that... be opting to used the language which they got from their domain than eee... what did you taught. That is the meaning, Ma'am.) And the respondent answered, “Iya. Eee... itu sebenarnya tantangan untuk kita, guru Bahasa Indonesia. Karena mereka memang lebih cenderung menggunakan Bahasa Melayu, Malaysia. Karena kebanyakan diantara mereka orang tuanya memang domisilinya di Malaysia, kerjanya di Malaysia tapi anaknya di sekolahkan di sini. Jadi pengaruh Bahasa Malaysia memang kental sekali, tapi itulah tadi, kita di awal, saya sampaikan kalau kita berusaha untuk meminimalisir, kalau tidak tahu bahasa Indonesianya yang betul, diminta untuk buka kamus lagi. Diajarkan, ini nah Bahasa Indonesianya yang betul supaya proses belajar mengajar berikut dia sudah bisa dengan bahasa yang sebenarnya, yang baik, begitu.” (Well. Eee... that is actually the challenging for us, the teacher of Bahasa. Because they are indeed inclined to used Malay, Malaysia. Because most of them, their parent are indeed domiciled in Malaysia, their job in Malaysia, but their children were school in here. So, the influencing of Malay is too strong, but that is before, early we, as I said if we try to minimazed, if they did not know its correct Bahasa, asking to open the dictionary again. Taught, this is its correct Bahasa so that the next study activity, they could with the correct Bahasa, the good one, like that.)

1. Selaku guru bahasa Indonesia, kami menerapkan bahasa Indonesia yang baik dan benar. Demikian juga kepada siswa diwajibkan untuk menggunakan bahasa Indonesia yang baik dan benar.
2. Secara pribadi, saya meminimalisir penggunaan bahasa lain terutama bahasa daerah. Karena di sini pengaruh bahasa Malaysia kental sekali, jadi saya meminta kepada anak-anak untuk mencari padanan katanya dalam bahasa Indonesia berinteraksi ketika di dalam kelas.
3. Karena keluarga suku Bugis, terkadang kami menggunakan bahasa daerah dan terkadang juga menggunakan bahasa Indonesia. Jadi kami menggabungkan kedua bahasa itu, karena kalau kami tidak memperkenalkan bahasa daerah ke anak, nanti mereka lupa asal usul mereka.
4. Kalau Bahasa Indonesia mereka mudah paham. Namun, kita lihat lagi, dikondisikan lagi, terkadang ada tatanan bahasa yang cocok untuk anak SD, SMP, dan SMA. Dilihat tingkatannya lagi, kalau kita terlalu banyak menggunakan istilah-istilah, mereka sulit memahami.

5. Itu sebenarnya tantangan untuk kami guru bahasa Indonesia, karena mereka lebih cenderung menggunakan bahasa melayu. kebanyakan dari mereka, orang berdomisili di Malaysia, tetapi anaknya di sekolahkan di sini. Jadi pengaruh bahasa Malaysia memang sekali. Jadi, kami meminta anak-anak untuk meminimalisir penggunaan Malaysia.
